Warren Dell Leggett

Warren Dell Leggett's long, successful career in finance at R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company (now Reynolds American) made him a well-known figure in Winston-Salem, but it was his big heart and selflessness that made him a community treasure.

Leggett (and his wife, Lois) are longtime NBTF and N.C. Black Rep volunteers and supporters. Their affiliation with the organizers goes back decades.

A member of the Alpha Pi Lambda Chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Inc. and a longtime parishioner at United Metropolitan Missionary Baptist Church, Leggett has also given his time (and money) to organizations like the Salvation Army Boys & Girls Club, the N.C. Central University Alumni Association and Big Brothers Big Sisters.

Marvtastic Philanthropy Award

Millennium Fund

Established in 2002, the Millennium Fund has raised and invested more than $50 million in projects and efforts to stimulate economic growth in Winston-Salem.

The Fund grew out of the Winston-Salem Alliance, a nonprofit started by local corporate bigwigs for job creation and economic development purposes. Winston-Salem Mayor Allen Joines is president of the Winston-Salem Alliance and an enthusiastic NBTF supporter. The Millennium Fund is a longtime sponsor of the National Black Theatre Festival, which benefits the economic climate by pumping tens of millions into the local economy every two years.

Mayor Allen Joines poses with Annie Hamlin Johnson, the mother of NBTF Founder Larry Leon Hamlin, at a 2011 marker dedication ceremony for her son.
