Scientific Observations on the Heat.

Professor Loomis, of Yale College, makes on the 17th inst, the following interesting observations upon the weather ;

" This afternoon, at 2 clock, my thermometer, suspended in the shade upon the north side of the New Haven Hotel, indicated 102 degrees, being the highest tem-perature known to have been observed in New Haven since 1778, a period of 89 years. The highest temperature known to have been observed in New Haven since 1778, a period of 89 years. The highest temperature recorded before the present sent season was 102 degrees, viz: June 24, 1864. Previous to this the thermometer had been twice observed at 101 degrees viz: June 24, 1864. Previous to this the thermometer had been twice observed at 101 degrees, viz: in 1798; and there have been three other cases in which the thermometer has risen to 100 degrees, viz : in 1781. 1800 and 1845, making in all seven known instances in which a thermometer, fairly exposed in the shade, has risen to 100 degrees and upwards.

The period just passed has been quite as remarkable for the long continuance of extreme heat as for its intensity. Withis a period of eleven days the thermometer Bounces, and not over 12 ounces, 6 cents; over Bow To BE WRAPPER has risen five times to 95 degrees and upwards. Since 1778 there has been only one other instance in which the thermome riod there have been but two other cases in which the thermometer has risen to 95 degrees as muny as four times during the same summer, viz : in 1780 and 1798.

"The hottest month at New Haven since 1778, was the month of July 1825. The heast of the past thirty days has been somewhat higher than that of July 1825, so that we seem authorized in-asserting that the heat of the recent period has been more intense, and the extreme heat has been longer continued than has occurred before in eighty-nine years, and probably for a much longer period."
