

Nixon Pardon Raises Serious Questions

The pardon of Richard Nixon by President Ford raises serious questions, 9th district congressional candidate Milton Short said Monday.

Short criticized Republican Congressman Jim Martin's comment that Nixon "was forced to resign." Short said, "The reality is that Mr. Nixon's own misdeeds made it mandatory that he resign. Sen. Goldwater himself stated that he doubted whether Nixon had 12 votes in the Senate. And yet Jim Martin is now implying that the press and the Democrats—hounded Mr. Nixon out of office."

Short also said that President Ford's pardon brings up the question of fairness to other Watergate defendants. "None of them has been pardoned even after trial or serving of sentence—much less before indictment," he said.

Short also questioned the credibility of President Ford. He said, "Mr. Ford indicated at his Vice Presidential Appointment hearings that he had made no deal to pardon Richard Nixon and that he would not do so."

Short said that the important thing now is to establish for the historical record all Watergate facts.

"If Rodino is headed off by the resignation, and Jaworski is headed off by the pardon, how will we get all the facts out and get the question answered that so badly needs to be answered. That question is the extent of Mr. Nixon's personal involvement," Short said.

"There are questions whether or not Mr. Nixon was aware of and approved of breaking and entering activities and spying activities going back to 1969, using the FBI and the CIA," Short said.
