Mrs. Beatty Serves Salem "Faithfully"

By Loretta Manago
Post Staff Writer
When you talk about the Mother of the Church and the Woman of the Year at Salem Baptist Church, you're talking about Mrs. Inez Montgomery Beatty.

Both of these honors were recently bestowed upon her by Pastor Jinwright and the congregation during the recent Annual Women's Day Celebration.

The oldest active member of the church, Mrs. Beatty joined Salem Baptist Church at the age of twelve.

Prior to her illness Mrs. Beatty served faithfully at the church in whatever capacity she was called. Some of her past memberships include the Missionary department, the Gospel Choir, the Vocal Choir and the Willing Workers Club.

She has been involved in the Court of Calanthe and the Guiding Star of the East. Mrs. Beatty is a member of the Friendly Aide Society.

In spite of her illness, Mrs. Beatty has been able to attend church every Sunday. In the community, she is engaged in the Senior Citizen group.

Her determination and her commitment to God serves as inspiration to all of the members at Salem.

Mrs. Beatty is the wife of the late Ralph Beatty and the mother of seven children: Eksie McCall, Mable Stewart, Ralph Beatty, Janie Gordon, Ruth Jefferson, Nancy Mungo, and Carolyn Gaskins. She has nine grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

"Excellence" Award Goes To Food Lion

Food Lion, Inc. has received the 1984 "Excellence in Television Advertising" award from the National Grocers Association. The award was presented at the Association's convention in St. Louis last week and was voted by members' advertising directors and other executives.

The award was presented for the television commercial, "Blahs," which is currently being broadcast by television stations throughout Food Lion's trading area in five states. The commercial, which was written by Tom Crabtree, vice president of advertising for Food Lion, is one of dozens that are written and produced by the company's advertising department each year. Many of them feature Tom E. Smith, president of the company, describing ways Food Lion saves customers money.

This is the fourth award a Food Lion television commercial has won during the past two years from advertising and grocery trade organizations.

Parents Become Concerned About Day Care Centers

In the wake of recent publicity about alleged abuses in day care centers in California and South Carolina, many North Carolina parents have become concerned about the quality of day care centers and the staff that work in them. Rachel Fesmire, director of the North Carolina Department of Human Resources' Office of Day Care Services, has some recommendations for choosing good day care centers as well as some signs of possible neglect or abuse.

Day care facilities in North Carolina must be licensed by the state, and parents should check to see that their licenses are current. Parents should also: -ensure that employees are qualified and have had lengthy experience. Parents should be wary of a center that has a frequent turnover of employees, especially if the center has been in operation for a long time;

-discuss the forms of discipline that are used. Talk with the staff about their attitudes on discipline; -observe the number of staff members. The lower the staff-child ratio is, the better the supervision and instruction will be for the children;

-talk to other parents who use the center. Ask the operators for references;

-make sure that facilities can fulfill your child's special needs such as toilet training, diapers, special allergies, etc.;

-ask to see the napping area to make sure that each child has his own mat or linens and be sure that the children are watched while they nap; -discuss the center's teaching techniques to ensure that they meet your expectations.

In addition to following all of these steps in selecting a good day care center, parents also should be aware of how to recognize possible neglect.

Fesmire says the most important thing parents can do is to believe the children.

If parents suspect that a child is being abused or neglected they should report it immediately to their county social services department. While under investigation, the report will be confidential.
