You Don't Have To Wipe Out Your Savings For A Quality College Education

How do you measure quality in a college education?

Some institutions measure it by the number of publications credited to their professors.

Some measure it in their tough admission policies, as if a college can't be good unless it's difficult for a student to be accepted.

A few institutions count quality by the number of years they've been awarding degrees.

But such traditions don't necessarily equal quality. At Central Piedmont Community College, we believe in results. That's how we measure quality.

After the first two years at CPCC, our students often go on to universities and advanced degrees. Some become doctors or lawyers or architects or community leaders. Some win Pulitzer Prizes or perform at the Metropolitan Opera or prepare a gourmet meal at your favorite restaurant.

They are winners.

Our professors help make them winners. That's why you can find them one-on-one with students after class. That's why they update their skills and knowledge regularly. That's why we keep classes small—close to 15 students per class, not 150. Our professors are here to teach. Not publish. Not conduct research. But to teach.

So if you're looking for quality in a college education, look first to Central Piedmont Community College.

At Central Piedmont Community College, you can take a full course load—12 hours of math, English, science, history, or electives—for tuition of $31. That's $153 for a full year of college.

You study the same freshman and sophomore subjects taught in four-year universities. If you transfer as a junior, you'll find your preparation is splendid. The universities' own records back this up.

Consider this: Taking your freshman and sophomore years at CPCC can save your family as much as $15,000. That's enough to pay for a master's degree.

And we haven't cut quality so you can cut costs.

Our modern classrooms and laboratories are equipped with the latest educational technology to improve your chances for success.

CPCC has professional counselors, a student financial aid office, job placement services, and instructors who are qualified professors and not graduate assistants.

We're not a no-frills college, either. CPCC offers more extracurricular activities than you can keep up with—clubs and organizations, a campus newspaper, sports, a dance company, student theater, athletic facilities, and more.

So if finances—and quality—are a consideration in your family, get an excellent start at CPCC. For less than a dollar a day.

CPCC offers more than 50 career programs—Business Administration, Marketing and Retailing, Dental Hygiene, Pharmacy Technology, Computer Engineering Technology, Nursing, Insurance, Machinist, Computer Operator and dozens of others.

In many cases, students can sign up for the college's cooperative education program, in which they can earn credit for on-the-job experience.

High school seniors can take advantage of career programs through The College Experience, a joint program with the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Schools. Tuition is free and students must receive permission to participate through their high school counselors.

Sorority Distributes Black History Poster

Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority has undertaken the task of assisting Nabisco Brands, Inc. in the distribution of their 4th poster honoring some of America's most recognized Black citizens. AKA has provided tremendous support for this project in the past by personal presentations and distributions of posters to schools throughout the United States.

The Black history poster series consists of Outstanding Black American Writers, distributed in 1980-81; Famous Black American Scientists, distributed in 1981-82; Famous Black American Leaders, distributed in 1982-83; Famous Black American Educators, distributed in 1983-84; and Black American Generals and Admirals for which distribution begins in Black History Month (February) 1985.

The new poster, Black American Generals and Admirals features flag officers such as Air Force General Daniel "Chappie" James (deceased), Army Brigadier General Benjamin O. Davis, Sr. (deceased), and the many others who rose so high in their respective services. The poster has drawings of officers both living and deceased and officers retired and serving active duty.

This poster series has been very popular, especially among public and college libraries and secondary schools. This series has been an exceptional undertaking for Nabisco Brands and part of the immense popularity is due to the fact that the posters are provided free of charge to educational institutions.

The Nabisco Brands' Famous Black American poster series was designed and produced by B&C Associated, Inc. The original artwork for the posters are on permanent display at Clark College, Virginia Union University, Mary McLeod Bethune Museum and the Martin Luther King, Jr. Center for Non-Violent Social Change. The original artwork for Black American Generals and Admirals will be donated by Nabisco Brands, Inc. to Tuskegee Institute.

The Black artist for the history poster series is James Huff, a native of Elberton, Georgia.
