UNDER THE GREEN-WOOD TREE

Freshman: Do you use butter knives at your house? Sophomore: No—but don't tell; you know how those things spread.

Dietitian: A few leaves of lettuce without dressing, and a glass of orange juice completes your daily diet. Student: And am I to take this before or after meals?

Dorcus L.: Listen, now, while I read you my new play. You be the audience. Myrtle J.: Just a minute, 'till I work up a cough.

Polly C.: College is just like a washing machine; you get out of it just what you put in, but you'd never realize it.

Miss McDowell: Young lady this is the third time that I've caught you. Young Lady: Don't be partial to me; the other girls might not like it.

Chem. Prof.: Audrey are you having any organic trouble? Audrey: No, Mam, I'm not the least bit musical.

Miss Crew: What's the matter, Margaret, don't you know the question? Margaret: Yes, ma'am, but I don't know the answer.

Doctor Burrell: What wrong did the sons of Jacob commit when they sold their brother, Joseph? Freshman: They sold him too cheap.

Miss Webster: Class, who was Homer? Thelma Freeman: Homer was one of the world's greatest chemists, often used as a disinfectant.

Pauline: Say, Rosalind, did your friend leave you his white suit? Rosalind: No, you fool, these are pajamas.

(Hilda Jones at board trying to prove a problem which she has forgotten). Miss Caldwell: Class, tell Hilda what she wants to do now. Helen (quickly): She wants to come to her seat.

Agnes Lassiter: Miss Webster, do you get these worms in Paris? Miss Webster: No, they come in apples.

Josie M. (after shampooing her hair): Look, girls, I've just shampooed my hair. Roxie F.: Maybe so, but it's the blackest hair I have even seen.

High School Girl: And what kind of a study does Miss Poe teach? Another H. S. Girl: Why the election of one's voice.

Subject put on board for term paper: Christmas Observances in Dickens' and Scott's Books, Subject on paper handed in: Christmas Observations by Dickens and Scott.

Freshman, relating some experiences after a week end at home: We had just reached our destination when it happened.

NEW BOOK SOON TO BE PUBLISHED

The Freshmen have not yet gotten out their book covering investigations and research by the class. A few of their discoveries, however, will prove to the faculty, and students, and the public in general what a valuable help it will be to the educators when it does come from the press.

The following will give some idea of the data that has been compiled:

Author: Nationality: H. G. Wells American; James Barrie American; Stevenson British; Kipling American; O. Henry English; Hawthorne Scottish

Rank as Writers: Blackmore—One of the best English writers.

Scott—He wrote much poetry and many novels.

Thomas Hughes—One of the best books on a boy's school life.

Kipling—His books are read by almost everyone. He was successful in his writings.

Barrie—He has written a number of novels, short stories, and essays.

Stevenson—He did not rank first as writer, but his works are popular.

Classification of Books: Tom Brown's School Days—An adventitious story.

The Call of The Wild—A historical book dealing with things of nature.

The Prince and The Pauper—One of his greatest productions.

Quentin Durward—Fiction. Kenilworth—Tragedy. Kidnapped—It's true to life.

Old Curiosity Shop—Historical fiction. The Virginian—Romantic.

Little Minister—It is one of his greatest novels.

Far from the Madding Crowd—Narrative.

Other Works by Authors: Blackmore—English novels. Scott—He wrote much poetry and many novels.

Hawthorne—He wrote much poetry. Twain—History and other things.

Dickens—Drama. Thackeray—Humor was his greatest works, but he wrote other things.

B. Y. P. U. RADIO PROGRAM

On Tuesday night the General B. Y. P. U. enjoyed an interesting radio program. The radio was operated by Odessa Moss. She first turned to station E. Mc. D. from which we heard Elizabeth Middleton discuss "Christian Fellowship in Church." She then turned to station W. B. E. and heard Eva Hoggard speak on "United" and Mildred Hinton speak on "Effectiveness." Miss Moss again turned on the E. Mc. D. station, from which we heard Eva Kinlaw speak on "Spirit Controlled." Mary Raynor, speaking from station M. M. N. talked on "Consistent." Wilma Ellington from station N. L. U. told us about "The Standard of Excellence."

The program was interesting and helpful, and carried out well. We almost believed that we were getting these messages over a real radio.
