

PASS, FRIEND

The doors of the morning must open.
The keys of the night are not thrown away.

I who have loved morning know its doors.
I who have loved night know its keys.

—Carl Sandburg

The Morning Hours

Photographs on this page were made near South Hall, Chowan's new high rise dormitory for men, by Larry Matthews, who serves the institution as Assistant in Graphic Arts. The scenes depict the morning beauty which is found with the rambling streams and lake.

We March to Different Drum

By DEBORAH FAULKNER
Secretary of SNA

As the world about us changes the Student Nurses Association of Chowan College marches to a different drum. The programs, projects and stands they take are all part of their commitment to improve health. Involvement in the association provides an opportunity for individual growth and development and is the opportunity for students to voice their opinions, share ideas, and grow in deeper relationship with one another.

The National Student Nurses' Association board of directors firmly believes in the potential of the association to improve health care through the impact a national organization can make on established nursing and health organizations and through work with allied health professions to upgrade the entire health care system. These, as always, remain our top priority objectives for this and coming years.

As future health workers, nursing students recognize their responsibility to the consumers of health care. Our motto is that we are not there for the patient but that the patient is there for us. Where as all professionals work together as colleagues to meet each patient's need, student nurses are an important step to collaborate as a team the approach to health care.

"Give A Damn" was the 1970 convention theme. Nursing students at the Miami Beach meeting translated this to mean not only caring for those in this country who are abused by society, but doing something about their problems. High lighting the convention was Senator George McGovern, whose keynote speech kicked off "Give A Damn Day." Students spent the remainder of that day taking part in group dynamics exercises designed to help erase the hangups people have about "getting involved."

"If a man does not keep pace with his companions, perhaps it is because he hears a different drummer. Let him step to the music he hears, however measured or far away."

Henry David Thoreau

In the world of today one often settles to conformity. This makes a world without love or concern for others. However in order as a student nurse to better increase the health care in the nation or across the seas one must follow the beat that he hears. This means becoming involved and active. Student nurses express their souls by the ability to reach someone, to feel deeply and become a part of what the world is all about. They accept the challenge and the responsibility to serve members of society through years of hard study, experience, and interpersonal relationship with those they come in contact with.
