Seeking Brave Standouts

Head football coach, Jim Garrison, center, talks with John Bove, left, linebacker coach at Penn State, and John Gutekunst, defensive end coach at Virginia Tech concerning players on the 1979 Brave squad and possible transfer to their respective institutions. Bove, who played for the Braves in 1958, said he appreciated the start he received at Chowan, both in academics and athletics. He later played and coached at West Chester State in Pennsylvania. Garrison has hosted a steady stream of senior college recruiters including representatives from Tennessee Tech, William and Mary, Elon, Middle Tennessee, University of South Carolina, Iowa State, East Carolina, North Carolina State, University of North Carolina, Wake Forest University, West Virginia Tech, and Duke. In all, Garrison expects some 20 sophomores to sign with four-year schools.

Teaching Art Gallery to Form Permanent Collection of Work

The recent opening of the Chowan College Teaching Gallery signals a quest by the Division of Art for "notable works of art" to form a permanent collection.

David Parker, who heads the Division of Art within the Fine Arts Department, said Chowan's students, college community, and general public will all benefit from the Teaching Gallery.

It is located in Room 204 of Green Hall, art facility. Parker said the new gallery differs from the Chowan Art Gallery in Daniel Hall, where different shows are scheduled throughout the academic year.

"The growth of the Division of Art has brought about a need for the students to be able to view original works — the best we can get. It's more and more critical that our students be able to study from original notable works of art," he explained.

"With a permanent collection in the Teaching Gallery, you have works the students can refer to and study throughout the year," Parker added.

He said the college is interested in acquiring a "first-rate collection." Parker said Chowan would naturally welcome any works by Rembrandt, Van Gough, Picasso, Hofmann, etc. But donations of "notable works of art by contemporary artists who have recognition and stature will also be appreciated," he declared.

Parker said the Division of Art professors, who also include Rinda Metz and Stanley Mitchell, believe the Teaching Gallery has "great potential." He explained, "What the Teaching Gallery is able to become will depend on the response we receive from the community."

Parker said the art faculty is optimistic that once individuals and families learn of the need, they will want to participate in building up the permanent collection.

"We want the permanent collection to be something that the college and the entire area will be proud of and benefit from," Parker said, noting the closest permanent collection is located in Norfolk.

Parker said that on occasion art shows will be featured for a short term in the Teaching Gallery in conjunction with a workshop conducted by the artist. The Teaching Gallery has opened with such a show and workshop by Marcy Edelstein, professor at the University of Virginia.
