Don't fail to witness Christmas Eve at Sunset, a true story of 1754, at the Gem theater tonight. This is a drama every patron of this popular playhouse should see. Did you ever see the curtain pole? Well, if you have not, you can't afford to miss it. It's a comedy full of wit and laughter, one in which you will readily join. The Rector's Sacrifice is a picture never surpassed in Washington. It is one of the very best pictures yet produced at the Gem. Now The Way They Fooled Dad, a farce comedy, is the ending of a program, for variety and interest, will be well worth your patronage tonight.

REV. AND MRS. I. W. HUGHES. Much Regret Felt at Their Departure From Fayetteville. Fayetteville, Sept. 27.—There was a largely attended reception given by the congregation of St. John's church to Rev. I. W. Hughes, which was attended by their friends or all churches to bid them farewell. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes left on Thursday, and their new home in Henderson, and much grief is felt here at their departure, as the numerous gifts that they received bore testimony.

Recently the Fayetteville Independent Light Infantry, of which Mr. Hughes is captain, presented him with a handsome silver gift, and his friends outside of his own church did likewise. St. John's congregation also gave him a handsome remembrance. Fayetteville has sustained a great loss in the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Hughes, and their place will be hard to fill.

Mrs. Hughes is an accomplished musician, and her sweet music at the organ will always be remembered by her hearers. Her husband is to be congratulated at having these charming people to make it their home.—Raleigh News and Observer.

Rev. Mr. Hughes is a Beaufort county boy, being the son of the late lamented Rev. N. Collin Hughes, of Chocowinity. He is one of the State's brightest young men and his friends and neighbors at his old home rejoice at his rapid climb as a minister of the gospel. He has accepted the rectorship of the Episcopal church in Henderson. The best wishes of all our people go with him to his new home.
