LET THE NEWS FOLLOW.

People leaving town should not fail to let the News follow them daily with the news of Washington fresh and crisp. It will prove a valuable companion, reading to you like a letter from home.

MUST BE SIGNED. All articles sent to the News for publication must be signed by the writer, otherwise they will not be published.

AN APPEAL.

People never stop to think how much their fellow-men are occasionally using a word here and there. Not only does this assertion carry with it truth so far as individuals are concerned, but it works to great advantage for the newspapers published in every village.

The Daily News believes the citizenship of this county wants and desires to see this paper succeed, judging by the numerous words of praise spoken in its behalf from all sections.

If a reader chances to see something in the advertising columns of the News they desire and are informed of the fact through these columns where it can be purchased, would it be asking too much or placing too

We are trying to help and aid you can you not in return favor us? We live among you, we are laboring for you, we are your homelike, and should not neighbors strive to befriend each other? It is as little as one could do.

ATTEND THE FAIR.

The State Fair comes off in the city of Raleigh, October 18-23, and every farmer in Beaufort county should resolve to attend. There will be every kind and variety of farm product exhibition; in addition there will be shown every late device used in successful farming.

Another thing. Not only are the products of the farm to be shown, but the agricultural department are to offer premiums for the best products. Surely the farmers of this county are as good as any in the State and they could do nothing better than to have a sample of what they can do at the he always stood the test in the past and at the coming State exhibition they may win. There is no better place to take your wife and the little folk. An exhibit of this character is a fine education for both old and young. If our farmers do not take advantage of this opportunity to display their skill, and do not see what others in the same vocation are accomplishing, they have no one to blame but themselves. They should go and study the latest appliances—see how the modern farmer does things, and then come home imbued with the fact that the farmer of the future must be up and doing.

A SCHOOL FOR CITY OFFICIALS.

"What the average city official doesn't know about municipal affairs would fill a big book," said a New York citizen with a granch the other day. How should the official know when he is but a short time on the job—a year or two at most, usually—but he generally tries to learn as rapidly as possible. And that "big book" is being compiled by a society which makes this its chief aim.

The American Society of Municipal Improvements was organized and is conducted for the purpose of bringing about an interchange of knowledge and ideas. In formal meetings, attended by many scores of city officials, matters pertaining to public works and city government are discussed freely and the members are not only informed as to specific details, but are broadened mentally by interchange of ideas with others.

In order that members may be sure to bring to the meeting such bearings and other information as may be needed to satisfy the desires of other members for information, a list of the subjects on which discussion is requested is sent to all members a few weeks before the meeting.

The society maintains a clearing house of information. Any member desiring municipal data may apply to this bureau for the same, and it does not have them at hand it will proceed to collect them from the cities of the country, for which it has special facilities. Some data so collected have been of such interest and value that they have been published by technical papers and used to advantage by scores of cities.

FRENCH GIRL OF THE AMERICAN GIRL.

While the French girl is generally brought up in a convent, the American girl, says Marc Debrul, in the Nouvelle Revue (Paris), "belongs to the public domain, and is, in a sense, a recognized and official personage in the eyes of the law."

Sloan's Liniment is the best remedy for sprains and bruises. It quiets the pain at once, and can be applied to the tenderest part without hurting because it doesn't need to be rubbed—all you have to do is to lay it on lightly. It is a powerful preparation and penetrates instantly—relieves any inflammation and congestion, and reduces the swelling.

without means, merely because he happens to strike their fancy. It is no uncommon thing for a girl of the best families to marry an actor, or be private secretary of her father—even a chauffeur, or coachman. These women have an instinctive passion for the unexpected. They love these carryings off, these marriages on the spur of the moment—events that will be written up in the papers and create public diversion. Even though their parents present no opposition, to the union, they love to play the part of persecuted children, of lovers who are thwarted, they are seduced by the spell of mystery, secrecy, and dramatic surprise.

"The same desire for the unattainable is shown in the way in which young heiresses in America hunger after a title. In this new country, there is no past; in this land of democracy there is no aristocracy. To have ancestors, even by marriage, is looked upon as a distinction; to gain a coat of arms and a title is to be an individual above the ordinary run of the class. The more difficult it is to obtain the title, the greater the glory. This is why the American heiress gives a cold shoulder to the coronets of French marquis who titles are offered for sale, and aspire to English titles.

"In the mean while, throughout the United States, and especially at Washington, there is much discontent over the international marriages which take so much money out of the country. These dollars play so important a part in life! The young girls who have fortunes, when they are but sixteen, are lured in their protections that they will never marry a man unless he is richer than themselves, and can afford to give them a yacht, a city house, and a chateau in France, and any amount of pin money. I shall not carry some one or other, declared a young girl, who for two years had been turning down suitors after suitors who had been engaged to her. I shall certainly marry, because it costs too much to remain single."

"The question of husband and wife in our country, and of old maids as well, is thus dispassionately and finally disposed of by this confident investigator. "The husband is the thing that furnishes the money. He is the banker of the establishment. The wife does not mind sinking into the condition of a mere parasite, eager for luxury, and glad to barter her heart and her beauty for dollars. Of course there are exceptions—women who marry for love, or prefer to remain single."

"These single women are common and yet uncommon in our country, remarks this acute observer. "The old maid is not particularly rare in the United States, but she is of a peculiar type. She does not appear as the resigned creature who has failed to please, or the sentimental soul who remains faithful to a memory. American practicality laughs at the idea of breaking one's heart over a love trouble. The American old maid has doubtless met with many opportunities of marrying, for in this country, a girl, if she be at all presentable, always has at least one chance. The American man desires to have a woman to represent him in public, while he himself is at work in his office. The wives of such men are fond of travel, they live a life of real elegance, less with the idea of pleasing others than for selfish satisfaction. Having neither family nor home they dispose of the time as they choose. They take an eager interest in politics, in social problems, in abstract and intellectual pursuits. They love movement and rarely indulge in either scandal or religious devotion."

Claims aggregating $91,000 against the Norfolk & Southern Railroad Co. have been filed by Messrs. Frank S. Gannon and W. B. Gwynn, who prior to the receivership proceedings were president and secretary respectively, of the company. Mr. Gannon's claim is for $75,000, said to be due on salary contract, and Mr. Gwynn's claim is for $16,000.—New Bern Journal.

The British steamer Brookby, Capt. ... the last vessel in port at present for cotton for foreign export, cleared yesterday for Liverpool, England, and will sail today with 12,739 bales, valued at $821,000. The vessel and cargo are by Alexander Sprunt & Son. Several other steamers to receive the staple are expected in port during the next few days.—Wilmington Star.

A movement is on foot by Merchants adjacent to the office of the Southern Express Company to have that company deliver whiskey at the rear door. These business men say they are increasing the volume of business carried out of the express company's office, especially on Saturday, is a nuisance. The express company
