HANDWORK OF AN EXPERT.

So much has been said about the report of Mr. Hillon who has been auditing the city's books that the impression that the citizens were very much interested in what the report would contain. The small attendance at the meeting last evening shows conclusively that we were in error.

It is to be regretted that so few of our citizens are interested in the value of the work done by the city's officers. Some do not know the value of the work done by the city's officers, but that is not the most valuable part of it, and we will not undertake to give it in detail here, but will do so in some future issue.

THE DIFFERENCE IN FOLK.

A comparison of the daily work of the business men of this city with that of the business men of other cities would show a difference in the way they do their work.

Another peculiar favorite is to have half the shirt of one material and the other half of some different kind of material. This is a mistake, and it is a mistake that is being made by many of our citizens.

Suppose Washington were full of such business men as the above, what a town we would have. Instead of walking along toward the goal of progress we would be standing in a hole.

of this city, for the good and uplift of every man and woman in it, and that when it is patronized it means another step in the rung of enterprise and achievement.

A GIANT INTELLECT GONE.

The death of Judge James C. McRea, dean of the University Law School, Chapel Hill, which occurred suddenly Sunday night, will be read with regret all over North Carolina. No man ever filled this exalted position who was more popular with the students and today many a tear of love falls on his bier from the mountains to the sea.

Judge McRea, has filled the position as head of the law department for a number of years, having succeeded the late lamented Dr. John Manning. He was a man of parts, an honor to the profession and State.

At the University this giant intellect shone as nowhere else. In every walk of life this distinguished citizen measured up to his calling. His death is a great loss to our State institution and to all his place will be no small task. Thus one by one the great and good are falling.

FADS AND FASHIONS.

New York, Oct. 14.—It is true that sheath skirts with extreme scantiness of material are no longer considered smart, but among the newest styles are to be seen styles that, while considerably wider around the hips, are so narrow around the ankles that they make walking almost impossible.

All the fashionable skirts shown among the latest importations display eccentricity in some direction. One of the fashions is their length. They are made so as to touch the ground all around and appear, morning, afternoon and evening, as if they were one and the same style.

Somehow or other all waists seem to be looser. At least they look larger, whether or not they are more than a trifle so. The fact that the waist is looser than ever before is a fact that is being noted by all who are interested in the fashion.

Another peculiar favorite is to have half the shirt of one material and the other half of some different kind of material. This is a mistake, and it is a mistake that is being made by many of our citizens.

the skirt in cloth or velvet and the other in silk. For evening wear the founced skirts are not yet very popular, but more of them are coming in as the season progresses and the costumes of 1860 are evidently destined once more to gain a place of themselves.

These wide, full skirts suggest crinolines, and the materials and trimmings are most suggestive of the fashions of the time just after the American civil war. Pleated and gathered skirts of tulle and mousseline, with narrow ruffles or ruffles headed with pipings of satin and bands of tiny artificial flowers, with knots of ribbon, certainly remind one of the gowns in old family portraits.

A more elaborate rendering of the same fashion is also to be noted in the superbly brocaded silks, with flounced edges and narrow fringe. But these are by no means the only models worn, and besides that there is such a large variety of the most beautiful materials to choose from.

Bands of fur and bands of embroidery are extremely fashionable as trimmings on the new skirts. One of the newest models for a street costume is of rough serge, the jacket of medium length and the skirt trimmed with a broad band of bear fur. The collar and sleeves are finished with the same fur. It is a smart model and the lines are simple and becoming to slender figures, so that it may become a popular design later in the season.

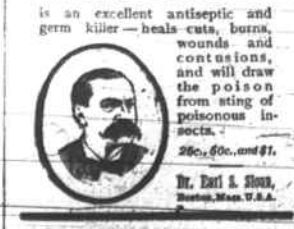

Many of the little evening wraps are of light and airy materials, equaling in thinness the gowns themselves. Others are more sensible wraps and of velvet which are again in high favor. These velvet wraps, when trimmed with Persian trimmings or fur in various assortments, are extremely handsome. The lining chosen with an evening cape has much to do with the effectiveness of the garment, and usually a contrasting color is chosen, harmonizing with the outer material.

Small little hooded wraps found in the shops are used extensively, and the shops are filled with offerings in velvet, dot and kindergarten printed patterns. Stripes have been in vogue for some time, and the stripes in various colors will be much in demand for a long time to come. Yellow stripes are especially in vogue for evening wraps. All the new and old styles have received a new twist and are particularly smart when made into evening gowns and wraps of the soft materials. With the wonderful offerings in the textile and millinery shops and value combinations, it should not be a difficult matter for any woman to find something to suit her pocketbook and her complexion.

Black has been the fall in Paris for the past twelve months, and the craze for black has reached America. Since then we have had black frocks, black hats, evening wraps, and other accessories of that order. Black and white with blue and red are also in vogue, and these colors are being used in many of the new styles. Black alone is not the only color in vogue, but it is the color of the season.
