TALE OF A BLACK DOG.
He is a medium sized black dog, wandering about our city's streets with the light of anxiety in his dark eyes, search and speculation in every wriggle of his slim, dark body, and wag of his tail. Of what breed he comes does not matter, he is looking for a lost friend and owner. He got into close quarters yesterday morning, when he pecked his nose into a certain store, and received blows and abuse from the keeper thereof.

Not everyone is capable of appreciating and understanding a dog. Few who can realize the feelings of a rebuffed creature whose sensibilities and instincts are so keen and true that they know back of the smug face the villain, are able to read through the coaxing words of an enemy the intended blow. Few, indeed, who think of the fact that the dog is man's best companion and most faithful friend on earth. At times kicked, abused and misunderstood, he remains true to his master, not caring for affluence, not deserting for poverty. Crime changes him not, fame does not increase his love. More watchful than a mother, more steadfast than a wife. Is there any human being who can stand this test of affection?

As it will be about the last of next week before the book will be complete, we would be glad to have a few more of those little blue eyed folk. They make the album.

But this dog is no common street cur. He is a gentleman. Half famished though he was when he met with friends who understood and pitied the knowing hunger in his ribs, who could see the light of intelligence in his soft eyes, he took faintly and gently the proffered food, and even showed off his list of tricks, sitting up to beg, standing on his slender hind legs, "speaking" for more, and shaking a friendly hand held out to him.

Whose pet is he? His coat is black, but the tips of his fore feet are white, and so is his heart, only that is all white. Some one must miss this good dog; that some one for whom he is always looking.

So pray you, gentle reader, if you are approached by this friendly animal, do not judge him mad, but give him, if possible, a bite to stay his hunger, and a friendly pat of encouragement on his search for a lost master.

A man with a cold in the head can get mighty mad with his family if they don't worry enough about it.
