THE POWER OF MUSIC
 Marie, the young queen of the gypsies, sank to the ground under the friendly shade of the elms with a despairing sigh and a world of trouble in her great, dark eyes. Far over in the clearing the tribe had pitched their tents, and from where she sat the queen could see the men gathered around the blazing camp fire, and she even fancied she could hear their glib murmurs of discontent.
 The future looked very dark for the GYPSY tribe, and as the young queen counted the few bits of silver in her purse she shook her head despairingly and her teeth sank deep into her quivering lips. Business had been very poor with the tribe for the past year; trux they had tramped many miles to all the county fairs, but there were as many other attractions and the people seemed to have lost interest in fortune telling. And the little pile of silver had pitifully diminished and the murmurings of the tribe had grown louder and louder. And Marie had slipped away from the others to try to think of a plan that would help her people. But the lovely dark head drooped despairingly until it rested on the palm of her upturned hand for try as she would she could think of nothing.
 Her sorrowful reverie was disturbed by the sound of approaching footsteps, and with a start she recognized the clearing as belonging to the tribe. The gigantic trunk of the tree hid her from their view, and she was too sad and disconsolate to make her presence known.
 The men commenced to talk in their native tongue, and as the drift of their conversation sank into the young queen's brain, her eyes grew wide with horror, for they were planning to wreck the train that ran through at midnight, escape with the spoils and leave the gypsy camp forever.
 When their plans were completed, they arose and departed, thinking no one shared their secret, but another and heavier burden had been laid on the young queen's shoulders.
 Quickly she hastened back to the gypsy settlement. One glance at the scowling faces around and she knew it was useless to plead with them. She singled the plotters out immediately. Jake, the most desperate man in the tribe, was their leader, and in low, exciting tones was explaining to the others the plan of action. The girl shuddered as she gazed at him; the scar on his face was livid, and a smoldering fire seemed to burn in his sunken eyes.
 The GYPSY queen was in despair; there was no one to whom she could go for aid or advice. Entering her tent hastily, her dress brushed gently against her harp standing neglected in the corner, and a sigh almost resembling the summer wind playing among Eolian harps in the willows, fell on her ears.
 In an instant she was beside it, sweeping one delicate browned hand across the strings, and the instrument responded with one grand, sweet chord that soon glided into a low, beautiful Hungarian melody that every gypsy loved with a passion too deep for expression.
 Dark figures soon began to gather outside the tent, and the poor, homeless gypsies, wanderers in a foreign land, dashed the fierce tears from their eyes as their hearts and thoughts flew back to their fatherland, fair Hungary, that they never more might see.
 And still the weird, strange, melodious music went on, now rising, now falling, almost dying away, and a smile of triumph lit up the queen's face.
 Her eyes turned from him and join the group around the harp, their great dark eyes meeting with love and tenderness for their fatherland.
 "How their queen wondered at their softened faces, but her heart great dumb with despair as her eyes fell on Jake standing alone in the shade of the elms, an evil leer on his scarred face. It was fast approaching the midnight hour and she was powerless to save the onrushing train.
 But once more she must try. This
ANOTHER OPEN LETTER.
 Greenville, N. C.,
 November 11, 1909.
 Mr. J. J. Johnson:
 Something like 14 days ago I wrote you an open letter, challenging you to meet me in the courthouse at Greenville, on a public issue you are conducting with the people of North Carolina, setting forth a bill of indictment very clearly which I am ready to defend at any time. Not having heard anything from you, I will state that unless you set a date soon, then I will, as I am determined to be heard, and am standing pat on the proposition.
 Yours, &c.,
 J. R. HUTCHINGS.

time she sang, a song the gypsies sing on parting; when the different tribes separate to take up their journeys in foreign lands. They have idled the summer away, but when stern winter approaches they must leave their native land and seek their living in other countries, and so the "Gypsies Parting" is sung at midnight just as the moon rises high over the mountains, and the cracked high voices of the old mingle with the musical voices of the young.
 Marie commenced the song alone, but before she had sung many bars the entire gypsy settlement had joined in one grand chorus and the summer night sang with the "Gypsies Parting." But high above the other voices rose a clear, sweet tone that belonged to just the man in the gypsy settlement, and that was Jake.
 The harp sang itself to sleep with one grand chord, the chorus died away, and the brave little queen had faintly just as the belfry clock tolled the hour of midnight. Willing hands rushed to her assistance, but Jake was before them all, and tenderly, almost reverently, lifted the unconscious form and carried her into her tent just as the midnight express rumbled through in safety.

TO OUR TELEPHONE SUBSCRIBERS:
 In order to obtain satisfactory telephone service, it is necessary for our subscribers to observe the instructions contained on the instruction cards tacked on to the various telephones. A great many of the subscribers are placing their receivers on the hooks before they complete their conversation and by doing this the operator gets the disconnecting signal which requires that she take down the connection, which, will of course, prevent you from completing the conversation with whom you were originally talking.
 It is also desired that you place your lips close to the transmitter and give the number of the telephone with which you desire connection slowly and distinctly, calling the numbers by digits instead of the usual way. As example, if you desire to communicate with telephone No. 221, call the number double two, one. The operator will then repeat the number back to you to assure you that she has heard the order correctly and will then make the desired connection. Do not ask questions of the operator, but call for the chief operator for information. The operators will be too busy answering calls of the subscribers to spend any considerable time in connection with your telephone to answer questions that can be just as well answered by the chief operator.
 There is still some additional outside work to be done in connection with the lines of those subscribers located outside of the corporate limits and outside of what is known as the cable district. It is necessary to string additional wires from the end of the cables to the subscribers' stations on these city districts in order to metallic circuit them. This work may cause some trouble to the subscribers, but every effort will be used to reduce the amount of trouble to a minimum. Should you have trouble, however, in using your telephone or find that it is not working satisfactorily, do not hesitate to call the chief operator or Mr. Bell, our local manager, notifying him of the fact, and the matter will then be given prompt attention.
