ROCKEFELLER'S MILLIONS
When Rockefeller's millions were refused with disgust.
As tainted in the making by the Standard Oil Trust.
The public cheered the populace who made that "grand stand play."
And the saying "tainted money" made him famous for a day.

How little do these people condemn the Standard Oil.
Know how indispensable it is to those on foreign soil.
For they send a missionary to some distant heathen land Where a "Standard" steamer dumps him with an oil can in each hand.

When he cooks his frugal dinner, when he goes to bed at night Tis the Standard Oil monopoly that gives him heat and light.
The very roof their shingles him from the elements without Has been patched in many places with an oil can flattened out.

He finds the case it came in can with very little toll Be remodeled into furniture, thanks to Standard Oil;
And ten to one his pupil, if he uses one at all,
Will bear the Standard's trade mark on the side that's next to the wall.

From Greenland's icy mountains down to India's coral strand, The Gospel and the Standard Oil are travelling hand in hand;
And if a true account were kept,
That the latter civilizes and the former trots behind.

So when that missionary reads the news of New York town, That tells of how his backers turned Rockefeller down,
He wishes they'd been sensible, accepted just a few,
And sent him a reluctance that is three months overdue.

Roosevelt says he was "dragged into politics." That may be so, but nobody seems able to drag him out now.

Taft is an awfully slow man; it takes him four months to take a vacation.

There is too much of a disposition to turn the hose on public officials already.

Roosevelt rode in an aeroplane at St. Louis, but flying about the country is a hobby of his.

A Prison Ship.
"The prison ship is not a thing of the past, but a thing of the present."
But the one who has been charged has no prospect of release. The Revolution has not freed the prisoners and the ship is still maintained in the city of New York.
There are usually from thirty to forty offenders of the minor class confined there. At night they are locked in cells, and in the daytime they work under overseers on the docks. The ship looks like one of our American embarks and the interior, while it contains no fancy furniture or decorative features, is light and well ventilated and probably more comfortable than the habitations which the inmates call home.—New York Tribune.
