The Cutting of the Jewel by the Grinding of the Stone

I have met a lot of people
 On my journeys here below,
 Who were always discontented—
 Grumbling 'bout their lot of woe—
 Never seem to know the blessing
 That a trial might secure,
 Or in passing take a lesson
 From the brazier on the street.
 But they fancied that the roses
 Should be grown without a thorn,
 That it ought to rain at midnight
 And be pleasant in the morn.
 And they never stop to listen,
 Or to reason out alone,
 That a jewel owes its luster
 To the grinding of the stone.

DR. HARDY, Sole Agent for Washington

With the humble and the lowly,
 With the aged and the youth,
 With the saint and the sinner,
 For the evil or the truth,
 With the monarch and the noble,
 With the haughty and the proud,
 With the beauty, or the woman
 Why must battle in the crowd,
 There is but to learn by labor
 And by facing every day,
 What there is of joy or sorrow,
 That may come their troubled way,
 And to know that every struggle
 That a tempting fate has thrown
 Is the cutting of the jewel
 Or the cutting of the stone.

In the soul of every mortal,
 Hidden deep from even them
 Lies a buried treasure, waiting
 That shall be a precious gem,
 If they will but delve and find it
 Neath the surface of the clay,
 And will throw the dust and ashes
 And the lust of earth away,
 Cherish it, and keep it flawless
 'Till the Faithful Master's hand,
 With its skill of love and patience
 That we can not understand,
 Shall have ground and cut it truly,
 And returned it for our own,
 And it sparkles like the jewel
 By the grinding of the stone.

If a duty be unpleasant,
 'Tis a duty still to do,
 And the false that is successful
 Is but passing, while the true
 That has failed to win its mission,
 Shall but yield the better ends
 When the battle shall be over
 And the victor comprehends—
 For the coward knows his measure
 And he hates himself the most!
 And the braggart is as empty
 As the echo of his boast,
 But to him who is courageous
 Shall the honor yet be known
 As the luster to the jewel
 By the grinding of the stone.
 —William Wakefield.

"CATCH THE SHADOW BEFORE THE SUBSTANCE FADES."

Did it ever occur to you when baby is young and fair,
 Some day he'd like to see himself up in his little chair;
 And when he looks at papa dear with a tender loving smile,
 That he will only look that way just a little while.

And when he sits upon your knee in the happy days of youth,
 And spreads his mouth for mear to ear and shows his little tooth;
 When he tries so hard to talk and rolls upon the floor,
 And then gets up and starts to walk and tumbles out the door.

And have you thought of Beesie, too,
 With her beautiful golden curls?
 Some day she would like to see herself when she was a girl;
 And take them all together, a happy little troop
 What a picture that will make in a family group.

So if you love your children, and would be ever true,
 Do unto them as you would have them always do to you;
 And give them plenty of everything and send them off to school,
 And teach them, by example, the precious golden rule.

Some day they will leave your tender care, and in the world to roam
 When just a little picture would turn them back to home;
 They may pile up wealth when they are grown and count it by the million,
 But they cannot have their pictures taken when they were only children.

But what if they should fall asleep, then you'd fairly rave,
 And send and get the camera man and photograph the grave;
 And keep it in your lonely home, not a thing of beauty,
 But just because it is as that is left of your neglected duty.
