LIVE-SAVING SERVICE

Few measures pending before Congress are worthy of more consideration than the bill designed to increase the efficiency of the life-saving service by providing for that important branch of the government service first recognition and compensation.

The bill that was introduced by Senator Bland and passed by the house last June, is now before the senate, and about to have the committee report on it. It has many provisions, but the most important one is that it provides for the compensation of the men who have been working in the life-saving service.

It contains two distinct propositions: First, to create a retired list for supernumeraries of life-saving stations, members of life-saving crews, constituting the field force of the service; second, to provide a graduated scale of increase in compensation for the same officers and men, based upon length of service.

Both propositions, to those familiar with the service as at present carried on, merit, approval, and their adoption would meet, it is believed, with general favor. Although one of the most hazardous services rendered by the government, less is done to make it attractive and to retain trained men than in almost any other branch.

Under the present system when men get too old to hold up his end with younger men he is released, virtually "knocked out," and men in their prime are substituted. No matter how many years of faithful service have been rendered; how many times the "worn out" one has risked his life in pursuance of his calling, all compensation ceases, and the life-saver is left, in some instances, a public charge.

A retired list, in keeping with some other departments of the government, seems but equitable and fair in the life-saving service; in fact it appears almost an imperative necessity. Such a measure is almost indispensable to a thoroughly efficient service, because of the reluctance of superior officers to deprive of their means of support such worthy subordinates, who have expended the vigorous years of their lives in the faithful service of the government; that justice, both to the employee and to the public service, demands it; that this nation, the only one of the leading nations that has not made some provision for this kind of its employees who have become incapacitated in service.

The second proposition contained in the bill calls for an increase in pay of surfmen, keepers and superintendents of 10 per cent for each five years' service, not to exceed 40 per cent.

The same provision has been in effect for some years in the army and navy, and also in some branches of the civil establishment, such as the revenue cutter service, the public health and marine hospital service in this department.

The graduated increase is intended as a recognition of the increase value of man's services as he gains experience in and a badge of his profession. It furnishes a definite incentive to the men to remain in the service, without regard to the chances of promotion through the occurrence of vacancies in higher grades. Ledger-Dispatch.
