Farmers' Educational and Co-Operative Union of America

Matters of Especial Moment to the Progressive Agriculturist

Too many circus days make a woe of our life. Dead seed ears will never produce bumper corn crops. Nine times out of ten, bad luck is nothing more than shiftlessness.

There is nothing like aiming high or "pulling the trigger before the gun gets wobbly." You won't need a sto until September, but it is none too early to begin to plan it.

Farming is not all horse shoes; a farmer doesn't succeed or fail because of "luck."

Borrowing may be the result of necessity at first, but it soon becomes a habit with some people.

There is nothing better than sobriety to take the place of that catch of clover you didn't get.

A thick coat of manure on the corn land means a warm coat for mother and the girls next winter.

Isn't it about time we quit trying to find out new things and, instead, spend our energies in doing as good as we know?

There are a great many more fools in the world than wise men, but the latter manage to control things pretty much their own way.

The farm workman who is always afraid he will do more than he is paid for, is not going about it in the right way to get more pay.

A farmer's capital consists of good health, strength and good soil, but unless he mixes plenty of common sense with them his returns will be disappointing.

We know a man who is always telling his boys that holidays lead to idleness and crime, yet when this man was a boy himself he never missed a chance to run away to go to the circus.

A New York sculptor killed himself because his work was unartistic, so he must have hated the thought of making money.

The New Yorker who was sent to jail for the theft of a loaf of bread is looked upon by his fellow New Yorkers as a plucker.

One of our scientists tells us that poets are mad, but they are not half as mad as the editor who is flooded with spring poems.

Reckless joy riders should be put to work on the streets and roads. Then their speed could be utilized with poetic justice.

Why do sociologists declare that a man cannot live on $20 a year when lots of them are supporting families on no greater wages?

Tom Edison says there will be no poverty in 100 years, but in the meantime the ultimate consumer is not in danger of dying rich.

A statistician informs us that there are 170,000,000 English speaking people, but he does not tell us how many of them speak English.

New York millionaires sometimes make good use of their money, even if the methods by which they acquired it cannot be commended.

Co-Operative Marketing.

The principal of co-operation is no new discovery, but is one of the fundamental laws of the universe. We have always been conscious of its continuous application in all the realm of nature. The farmer conforms to its requirements in tilling his soil and producing his crops, yet he has not applied it to the business end of his occupation. He has noticed that it is the dominating influence in all business enterprises as well as in all political affairs, but for some unknown reason he has refused to apply it in marketing his produce. He seems perfectly willing to hand this part of the business over to an alien and pay him liberally for his work. In other words he is satisfied to take 41 cents for what the consumer pays a dollar.

Where Co-Operation Has Not Been Successful There Prima Facie Evidence of "Hog."

In the course of an address delivered by State Agent B. L. Moss of Alabama at the Southern Educational conference, recently held at Nashville, Tenn., he said in reference to co-operation:

"Aside from the Farmers' union and the press, both of which have done and are doing much commendable work, we have three distinct agencies in Alabama that are laboring for the betterment of agricultural conditions. These are the state department of agriculture, the agricultural college and experiment stations and the national department of agriculture. Realizing that 'a steady pull and all together' will secure far more satisfactory and lasting results, it has been our constant aim to secure a harmonious co-operation between these varied agencies. This we believe we have attained to a marked degree.

"Now, just a word with reference to co-operation. I believe that I am prepared to lay down this proposition, namely, that where it is impossible to co-operate, it is prima facie evidence that there are one or several 'hogs' in one or all of the organizations in question. The state agent of the demonstration work may be the guilty swine, or it may be the commissioner of agriculture, or the director of experiment stations, or just who is responsible in such a case is difficult to determine, since each man lays the blame on the other. However, the main fact remains that in this work of carrying information to the farmer there is entirely too much duplication of work, too much of a desire to claim credit for results accomplished, and too much of a tendency to decry and belittle the efforts of the other fellow. Many men have lost sight of the fact, if they ever perceived it, that the public welfare is the goal of the efforts of every real public servant.

"I wish to make a plea for the other fellow. Just as I believe that all knowledge has some value in education, so do I believe that the efforts of all those engaged in the dissemination of agricultural information are destined to bear fruit. It is unjust, unwise and highly undiplomatic for a demonstration worker to place himself in a skeptical attitude toward our state departments of agriculture and our colleges and experiment stations and the undeniably excellent work they are doing. And the rule reversed is equally true. So let us be charitable toward those who in reality are our fellow workers, though possibly along divergent lines; and when we do we usually invoke the Golden Rule as the guiding spirit in the attitude of the other man.

"None of us claim to have attained perfection down our way; but we have been able to establish our work on what we have named our 'Co-operative basis, uniting as it does the best efforts of the different agencies in the state. Not only are we co-operating, but we are pleased with the results and we believe the people of Alabama are. So much so, that we hope, some time in the near future, through a co-operative arrangement, to have a really well organized state. At present we are only comparatively well organized. When Alabama was, in each of her 67 counties, a highly competent, adequately paid agent, working six days in the week for 12 months in the year, I believe then, and only then, can we boast of a well organized state.

"Dr. Knapp, the best and greatest man I ever knew, christened wisely what we have named our 'Co-operative Demonstration Work,' for he foresaw, even then, that the more quickly all agencies joined hands to break down the barriers of ignorance and build up a progressive, prosperous agriculture, the sooner would our southern states blossom into that fruitfulness of wealth and citizenship to which nature has entitled them. What success we have attained in demonstration work in Alabama has been based on this idea; and all that we hope for in the future of our work is, in my opinion, to be attained through these means."

Menace to Fruit Growers

Independent Buyers and Commission Houses Endeavoring to Get Foot-hold in California.

The co-operative fruit associations on the western slope are beginning to see that the selling end of the business is becoming menaced by independent buyers and commission houses trying to get a foothold in the organized districts, says the Denver Field and Farm. With all their organization the best of them got a rotten deal on their last crop and much complaint is heard from one end of the country to the other about the poor prices obtained. We cannot understand why any right-thinking fruit grower should ever consign his crop through independent buyers, even though they may be good, reputable firms. In the first place, it is in direct opposition to the system of co-operative marketing, and tends to destroy the efficiency of the organization. One careless practice is to allow growers in an association to market outside if they so desire and a penalty should be laid against every man who does this and at least a cent a box should be paid into the association. The great trouble with the whole business is misrepresentation and some way ought to be devised to stop it. One faker in Denver has just gotten a good fine for this practice and he is still in the courts.

Care for Little Colt.

The little colt should get nourishment from the mare within the first hour, or there may be trouble.

Training Horses.

It is an easy matter to train a horse to move promptly and step quickly if you commence right when you first handle him. In raising horses for market the first thing taken into consideration should be the class of horse that will bring the most money. A spirited horse holds his head high without a checkrein and no checkrein in the world can make a broken-down horse look like a spirited one. A fine spirited horse may often have a bungling gait or lack of endurance from bad feet, which will hurt his value very much and too often it is all the owner's fault.

Weigh the Hay.

But few farmers weigh the hay given to stock. It is true that to weigh hay for each cow every time a herd is fed is tedious, but by weighing a quantity a few times one will be able to come close enough to estimate the quantity in feeding. The object should be not to overfeed. A great many nonproducing animals receive more than they require, although they may consume it. Ten pounds of hay a day should be sufficient for an ordinary horse that is well supplied with grain. The amount allowed cattle should depend upon circumstances. Cows giving milk will consume and utilize more than steers.

CO-OPERATION KEY TO FAME

Successful Leader of Co-Operative Agriculture Will Surpass "Captains of Industry."

(By C. R. BARNES)

To the men who, by virtue of their exceptional ability to discern the conditions of success in various large undertakings, backed by a genius for organization and the influence which comes from commanding powers—have become leaders in the various lines of production and transportation, the American people are fond of applying the name "captains of industry." And that to such men, rather than to knights and warriors as of old, we are prone to award the highest social status, is not the smallest of the many indications of the growing ascendancy of ideals which make for peaceful progress, over those of a receding barbarism.

But it is significant that, while agriculture is the foremost of American industries and the basis of all others, so few of the aforesaid captains of industry are to be found among our farmers. We hear, now and then, of a "peach king" in the east, of a "corn king" in Missouri; or of a "cotton king" in some southern state. He is usually entitled to a place among the captains, if at all, only from the fact that he has acquired, and shown himself able to manage with unusual success, an exceptionally large acreage of land devoted to the crop from which he takes his royal title. It might seem from this that, if agriculture is ever to show its due proportion of captains of industry, it must be through the building up of great estates, to the sacrifice of the democracy whose best exponent is the small farmer.

But the steady growth of the principle of co-operation among farmers, and its application in an increasing variety of forms, would appear to open before able and aspiring men such opportunities for conspicuous leadership as make those offered by the ownership and skillful management of a single big estate seem insignificant by comparison. The man who can take the lead in encouraging, directing and organizing the forces which make for co-operation in an agricultural community, will not only be at the head of larger affairs than any of the aforesaid "kings," but he will perform a more beneficent work. For, while—as one of the co-operators—he may well share in the individual gains of co-operation, the main inspiration for his endeavors must ever be a lofty public spirit, which kindles everywhere among his fellows a desire to "help one another," as the surest way of advancing one's self.

Prior to 1852 Denmark was a comparatively poor country; its farmers an ignorant peasantry; its agricultural resources undeveloped. In that year agricultural co-operation had its beginnings; and in the thirty years which have since intervened, it has wrought a complete social and economic revolution. Not only has Denmark now become, next to England (population considered) the richest country in Europe, but the whole population has experienced an educational and social uplift. Hardly anywhere has co-operation been developed in so many phases. In it has been found the key to universal prosperity.

What has been done in Denmark can be done, under efficient leadership in Minnesota, Texas, California, Maine and every other state in the Union. American life, it is true, is already on a far higher plane than that of Denmark thirty years ago; but the uplift which comes from the development of co-operation should therefore be grander in a relatively long period. And the honor which shall come to the captains of co-operation, who take the lead in such development, shall far outshine that which is bestowed today on the captains of industry; who, after all, are only the best representatives of the selfish individualism we once glorified, but which is now recognized as inimical to the best interests of American democracy.

The No-Rim Cut Tire is Here

YOU have read much about the No-Rim-Cut tire. It is here. Come and let us show you. Let us explain the No-Rim-Cut and 10 per cent oversize features. Let us show you how it cuts tire bills 48 per cent. Most of our were slow to adopt this tire. Now over 1,000,000 have been used and on some 200,000 cars. Now the demand is greater than ever before. Six times that of two years ago. Men everywhere are now accepting No-Rim-Cut tires.

We were slow to take up this tire. We made a thorough investigation and comparison. The evidence became overwhelming. We were convinced. The tires are now here. We recommend them to you. You should use them. Here's the evidence—

No-Rim-Cut tires are made 10 per cent oversize to cover the wear. This gives 10 per cent more air—20 per cent more carrying capacity. It's the air that carries the load.

This oversize is permitted by the No-Rim-Cut construction. That saves overloading. Prevents blow-outs. It cuts probable tire cost 25 per cent.

10 per cent oversize saves 25 per cent. No-Rim-Cut feature saves 23 per cent. Both together save 33 per cent on an average. Isn't it reasonable for men to prefer this tire? Don't you see why we so strongly recommend it? Don't you think you should use

10 Per Cent Oversize

When a car is overloaded, as most cars are at times, the tires are subjected to excessive strain.

ROASTING

There is a difference between meat roasted in a GAS oven and that by any other method.

The lower oven is used for all roasting purposes and broiling, the upper oven for baking purposes; both ovens being heated at the same time and with the same flame.

The oven must be heated previous to roasting, the same as for broiling—ten minutes full heat. Turn meat frequently (leaving door open) until each side is seared. Then place roast lower down in the oven, add seasonings and begin basting with the fat which drips into the pan. The oven flame may also be reduced, and as a rule the front burner will do all the work after the preliminary broiling of the surface. Red meats so roasted taste more like the old-fashioned roast before an open fire, than when cooked in any other manner. Not a drop of water is required for basting if there be a proper amount of fat, and the heat be moderate after basting is begun.

Just try a roast on your GAS Range and following all the instruction and you will have the finest piece of roast beef you ever tasted.
