Public Now Has Full Confidence

In Used Cars Offered For Sale

One of the outstanding changes that has made itself felt in the automobile business in the past decade is the tremendous improvement in the status of the used car in the public mind. W. E. Holler, vice president and general sales manager of the Chevrolet Motor Co., called attention to this fact in an interview on the eve of the 10th anniversary of the adoption of Chevrolet's "Guaranteed OK Red Tag." The "Guaranteed OK Red Tag" is now nationally famous as one of the earliest steps taken by any manufacturer toward eliminating the element of chance from the purchase of a used car.

"No one who recalls the doubtful esteem in which used cars in general were held even as recently as 10 years ago will care to dispute the statement that a big advance has been made," said Mr. Holler. "This advance can be attributed to the dawn of a realization, on both the dealers' and the manufacturers' parts, that a successful future depended on eliminating unethical practices which had given the used car business a highly doubtful reputation."

Leading motor car dealers were quick to see these points and set about to raise the standards of their used car operations. Thumbing through an old Saturday Evening Post—for April 18, 1925—I recently came across the confessions of an old-time used car dealer, who entitled his article "Looks and Runs Like New." This dealer admitted some shady tricks, but came eventually to a conclusion which he expressed like this: "I still sell used cars, but I operate now on almost a golden rule basis. And so that no one will accuse me of being a hypocrite, I'm going to admit that I do this not because of any sentimental feeling for my fellow man, but through plain selfishness. I find it a more profitable, more pleasant, and less troublesome way to do business."

"That last sentence sums up the whole situation. Business must be run for profit, and an honest used car policy is more profitable than the other kind. It holds the customer's business. The buyer comes to know that he can depend upon the dealer's word, because the dealer wants to stay in business and recognizes that his only chance of doing so lies in constantly giving owner satisfaction."

Not only the policies surrounding the sale of used cars, but the used cars themselves, have undergone marked improvement. Mr. Holler pointed out. "Obviously, the most recent of the used cars are only a few months behind the current new car models in point of the features they embody—their power, speed, safety, economy, comfort, and good looks," he said.

"Yet they represent substantial savings, as compared with new car costs, and if bought of a reputable dealer their purchase involves no risk.

"Even at the sacrifice of a few dollars' difference on two identical models, one of them offered by an established merchant and the other by an unknown used car dealer, it is wiser to buy from the established merchant whose future depends on customer satisfaction, and who, as a substantial member of the community, will stand back of what he sells."

"The purchase of a used car today is an investment in unused transportation. That has been said a good many times, but it still holds true. The "Guaranteed OK Red Tag" used car bought of a Chevrolet dealer can be depended upon to bear out the dealer's claim for it. Ten years' experience in merchandising honest transportation values has established this now-familiar tag firmly as the mark of dependable wares."

Under the "Guaranteed OK Tag" plan the dealer is provided with a supply of large red tags, each bearing a list of the various mechanical features of the car and, opposite the name of each feature, a space for the insertion of a check mark after the reconditioning and inspection of that part, preparatory to offering the car for sale. Since the tag can not be affixed to the car until every feature listed has been checked and found in proper shape to give owner satisfaction, the presence of the tag constitutes an assurance to the buyer that his purchase is an investment in dependable transportation. Further, since the dealer is familiar with the condition of the car, in full detail, he is in a position to sell it with confidence of its giving owner satisfaction.
