PLAYWRIGHT TO HELP CELEBRATE
University of North Carolina, and father of America's Little Theatre movement. Against the authentic background of Fort Raleigh on Roanoke Island, N. C., on a specially constructed stage, utilizing scenically the waters of Roanoke Sound, Paul Green's lines and action will be the feature of a celebration extending from July 4th to September 6th, Labor Day, and reaching its climax on August 18th, the birthday of Virginia Dare. This work of art will be presented several times each week.

Boys Enjoy Advantages Of Delightful Tropical Isle
land escaped their attention although they would like to have had a bit more time. The members of the Coast Guard and the Light House Services were kept busy answering the many questions that they were asked by the boys. Not content with the answers, the boys had to learn more and secured permission to climb the observation tower at the Coast Guard Station and enter the magnificent Light House. They found peaches almost at the ripening stage.

The island was literally a paradise for the boys. Lying just far enough away from habitation and still close enough to stay in close touch with the rest of the State, the island with its tropical vegetation and climate presented the ideal play-ground.

When Sunday came, every one was reluctant to leave, but all good things must end and the boys touched their oars to the water at about two o'clock and bid farewell to a very beautiful place but with the hope that they will be able to once again go back and take up their exploration where they left off.

Those making the trip were: Willard Byrd, George Wooten, Chas. McNeill, John McNeill, Joe Maultsby, Kaydo Canady, Rone and Bill Lewis, Richard Auger, Arthur Baldwin, James Fore, Marvin Allen and Lee Greer.
