Eight-Pound Calf Born Near Town

While no one around here seems to know what should be the normal weight of a newly born calf, the general supposition seems to be that a baby cow should tip the scales at anywhere from 30 to 60 pounds.

If this supposition is correct Joel Moore, of Southport has a cow whose second calf, born two weeks ago, is something out of the ordinary. The little animal weighed only 8 pounds at birth.

It is living and thriving, but after more than two weeks it is still below half the size of a normal calf at birth.
