FARMERS ASKED TO SHARE MACHINERY WITH OTHERS
Most farm machinery wears out from misuse, abuse or lack of use, says D. S. Weaver, agricultural engineer of the State College Extension Service. He suggests that war-time shortages of farm machines offers the owner of a combine, hay baler, corn picker, peanut harvester or tractor the opportunity to get the maximum value out of a piece of machinery by doing custom work.

"Share your farm machinery with others," Weaver suggests. "Custom work has several advantages and, of course, some disadvantages. The chief advantages are that more working hours can be obtained from the investment in equipment. The operator of a custom machine is usually better qualified to run his particular equipment, and do a better job with it, than are a large number of individual operators who do not have occasion to use their machines many days in a year."

The farm engineer says that relatively few machines wear out from actual use. A machine that is in constant use is usually kept in better condition. It is lubricated regularly and kept in good repair.

"When one considers that farm use of most machines are limited to a few days in a year, whereas industrial machinery is used practically the entire year, it is easy to realize the importance of working as many days as possible with farm machinery," Weaver stated.

Another method of relieving the shortage of farm equipment, suggested by the Extension specialist, is cooperative purchase of separate items. While experience in this method of handling equipment is limited, satisfactory plans probably can be developed for the increased use of this method. With farmers responding to the call for more food, no stone should be left unturned to develop means of overcoming the shortage of farm labor and the scarcity of farm equipment, Weaver declared.

FARMERS GROW NITROGEN WITH INTERPLANTED CROPS
Here's a suggestion from a group of North Carolina farmers, passed along to other Tar Heel farmers by E. R. Collins, Extension Service agronomy leader of N. C. State State College:

Velvet beans and cow peas interplanted with corn will "grow nitrogen" this summer to overcome the war-time shortage of nitrates which is almost certain to become more serious by 1943. Where the vegetation from these two legumes is turned back into the soil, the nitrogen equivalent of the velvet beans or cow peas will be about 250 to 300 pounds of nitrate of soda per ton of vegetation.

Dr. Collins reports that there are several thousand bushels of cow pea seed, and a considerable amount of velvet bean seed, for sale in the State. Forward-looking farmers have been buying these seeds to interplant in their corn.

The Extension agronomist says velvet beans can be planted in the corn when the corn is knee high. Velvet beans vary considerably in their percentage of germination from year to year, and it usually is wise to have a germination test made on the seed by the State Seed Laboratory in Raleigh. Usually, however, velvet beans are planted three to four feet apart in the row. Where the germination is low, it is necessary to plant at a higher rate or space closer in the row.

Cow peas can be sown down the row at the rate of approximately a peck per acre just before laying by the corn. The cow peas can be picked next fall and used as food for home consumption. Both the cow peas and the velvet beans planted in the corn will increase the grazing value of the land next fall.

STATE COLLEGE HINTS FOR FARM HOMEMAKERS
BY RUTH CURRENT STATE HOME AGENT
The smart cook prepares vegetables for the table so they keep that fresh garden look and taste, along with the vitamins and minerals. To her it's a crime to overcook green vegetables or to pour down the sink the juice—the good old-fashioned pot liquor.

Best way of all to cook green vegetables is to boil but make it speedy. And cook uncovered, only until tender, in as little water as possible. Season to taste with salt, pepper, and a little fat. For a "different" flavor, add chopped parsley, chives, or other herbs just before serving. Arrange attractively on a dish and serve while hot.

There are many different kinds of sewing threads made for special purposes. Always select the thread that is right for the fabric—fine thread for fine fabric, coarse thread for coarse fabric.

Basting thread can be an expensive thread since it is for temporary use only. Look for spools with large yardage.

Button and carpet thread is so named for its strength and uses. So is quilting thread.

Mercerized sewing thread is a fine quality and is usually best for materials like silk and rayons.
