

SOCIETY

ERTAINS FOR
S. L. G. BROWN

Mrs. J. W. Ruark and Mrs. J. D. Dasher were joint hosts at the home of Mrs. Ruark Thursday evening, honoring Landis G. Brown, wife of Lt. Commander Landis G. Brown, who is serving with the medical corps overseas. Dr. and Mrs. Edward were married just before Christmas. She is now making her home here, where the Lt. Commander will join her and resume his medical and surgical practice at the end of the war. He is serving with the Navy, having been called to the colors nearly three years ago. Prior to entering the service he was practicing medicine and surgery here.

Mrs. Gene O'Brien, of Wilmington, is spending several days here with Mr. and Mrs. Prince O'Brien.

Helena Survivor Married Recently

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Potter returned to Asheville Monday. Mr. Potter, who is a boatswain mate 1c in the Navy, has been undergoing treatment in the Naval Convalescent Hospital in the mountain city. He may be there for some time yet, recuperating from exposure he suffered when the Cruiser Helena was sunk several months ago. It will be remembered he was one of the 162 survivors of the warship who got ashore on a Japanese held island and were subsequently rescued by U. S. warships.

Mr. and Mrs. Potter, Mrs. Potter the former Miss Faye B. Payne, of Walnut, N. C., were married in Asheville on January 3rd. They have been visiting Mr. Potter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Potter.

Miss Mildred Gilbert of Bolivia has returned to Meredith College to resume her studies, after spending the holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Gilbert.

Mr. C. E. Carawan and little son spent the week-end in Washington.

Mrs. A. L. Brown has been spending a few days with friends in Vanceboro.

Care In Handling Of Poultry And Stock Is Urged

Shortage Of Veterinarians Necessitates Special Care During Next Four Months To Keep Down Disease

THOMPSON GREENWOOD, Editor N. C. Department of Agriculture, RALEIGH, Jan. 17.—If farmers of North Carolina expect to make their contributions to the war effort this year equal to those of 1942 and 1943, they must—in the face of a shortage of veterinarians—work "doubly hard during the next four months to keep their poultry and livestock free of disease." This is the belief of Dr. William Moore, head of the Veterinary division of the State Department of Agriculture.

Explaining that "forced production means greater health hazards all along the line," Dr. Moore declared that farm animals and poultry must be given the same extra care as would be given a high-powered machine.

"Draft-free, comfortable, well-bedded buildings contribute as much as anything to the health of all farm animals," said Dr. Moore. He added that nutritious, balanced rations which contain proper quantities of proteins, minerals and vitamins are also important disease preventives.

He asserted that manure and wastes of the body should be carried out of the buildings as promptly as possible, and should not be thrown on fields on which the same types of animals will be used—or should be plowed under to destroy worms and larvae.

"Livestock producers should avoid going neighboring into barnyards and other places where livestock infection is known to be carried to the home herd on feet, clothing or hands or even on truck or wagon wheels."

Dr. Moore is of the opinion that goals set with regard to meat, milk and eggs will be "if we give our animals proper care, if we fight off disease."

"Authorities tell us that in this day of feed shortages 15 per cent of all hog feed is wasted—fed to hogs which die on the farm before they can be marketed. By feeding corn to wormy pigs, one out of every five ears is lost. We cannot afford that kind of waste during 1944. We must make war on livestock parasites and livestock disease losses as never before. It will take the combined effort of alert stockmen and qualified veterinarians if we are to accomplish the desired result," declared Dr. Moore.

The sun's rays are a good disinfectant; extremes of temperature, certain types of soil, and varying degrees of moisture also help to kill certain forms of disease germs and parasites. This is why rotating pastures helps to keep down infestation. Cleaning and disinfecting livestock quarters regularly, raising livestock on clean ground, and having animals treated promptly if symptoms of disease appear—all of these precautions aid nature in controlling livestock diseases, Dr. Moore has found.

"The livestock owner should have his animals immunized against diseases which may be a threat in the community. Hogs should be immunized against cholera, and cattle against black leg if there is a history of this disease in the vicinity. Horse owners should have their work animals vaccinated against sleeping disease or blind staggers."

Dr. Moore advised farmers to "do all you can to prevent your poultry and livestock from being hit by disease, but if one or more animals shown symptoms of disease, isolate such animals from the herd and call a veterinarian promptly for an accurate diagnosis so that you may take steps to prevent losses."
