Jenrette Farm Becoming Model For Modern Methods

(Continued from page 1) around the farm and answer any questions propounded by the newsman and his companion, County Agent J. E. Dodson. A visit to his hog pasture was first in order. This was three and one-half acres of fenced land on which he has been grazed 85-hogs since the first of last January. He had fertilized and seeded the tract and it was in fine shape for grazing at the first of the year. Aside from the grazing the hogs have had very little feed since the first of the year and they are in fine, thrifty condition. Fat and sleek, his stock hog weighs in the neighborhood of 500-pounds and a couple of dozen others will range from 200 to 400 pounds each. Most of them are purebred Berkshires and all of his sows and gilts that are not strictly purebred are being bred to the purebred sires. In addition to his older registered Berkshire boar he has just recently purchased a Beechnut registered Berkshire boar from the Renz farm in Covington, Ohio. This boar cost $50.00 while just a small pig.

The hogs are moneymakers, thanks to the well planned pasturage and the growing of fattening foods for the three months of the year when the grazing is short.

The hogs are not the only things in which the young farmer takes pride. Sharing his pride for the hogs, and equally profitable, is a herd of 29 pure-bred Aberdeen Angus cattle. Of them 15 are adult cows, one registered bull, 6 yearlings and 7 calves. The Angus cattle are probably superior to the Herefords in being suitable for a Brunswick county beef breed. They are just as good stock as the Herefords and they are better rustlers for their food than the Herefords are credited with being. In color they are coal black.

Like the herd of hogs the drove of cattle is being steadily increased in number.

Asked about his field crops, Kimball stated that he had 4 acres in wheat from which he had gathered 25-bushels per acre; 6-acres in barley that yielded 30-bushels per acre and were turning out 40-bushels to the acre. He has 15-acres in fine corn; 14-acres in tobacco; 30-acres in lepezea, with other crops also being produced. Not the least to claim his interest is a lot of nice woodland, some of it now containing some of the finest mature saw timber that can be found in a day's looking around.

His parents are more than pleased. They are delighted with their son's industry and practical ability as a farmer. All of his brothers and sisters are now married or are living elsewhere. One of them, Lt. Addison Jenrette, who served in the air corps for about four years, is now assistant county agent in Duplin county. This is a work for which he was trained at State College before the war. Kimball, with no training and only his good sense and industry, is turning out to be a model farmer that many would pattern after.
