Cat Uses Harness
When Taking Walk

When does a kitten become a cat? Dr. D. W. Pittman, Whiteville veterinarian, regarded the question as impertinent and laughed off the inquiry.

Toby is either a kitten or a cat, but Mr. and Mrs. Ward A. Coleman don't know how to classify him. If he's a kitten at nine months old, he's some kitten.

And even if he's a cat, he's off to a pretty fair start.

All this is preliminary to the tale of Toby. He was born during the February snowstorm last Winter and grew and grew. His male master recently went to a local store to buy dog harness for use with Toby. He estimated the size and got a No. 9. That was too little and he exchanged for No. 11. Finally, he hit the mark with size No. 14.

And that brings this story to a near-climax. Toby, so far as his owners know, is the only felline (this avoids the choice between cat or kitten) that goes walking like his traditional enemy—the dog. He strolls ahead or follows the leash as his feline instincts dictate.
If the dinner hour passes and Toby isn't taken for a walk, he lets the Colemans know about it. Instead of meowing for food, he walks under the hook where his harness hangs and waits for his exercise. Thus is it no strange sight on the streets of Whiteville to see Coleman, who is general manager of Radio Station WENC, or Mrs. Coleman strolling along with their huge feline.

ARMCHAIR QUARTERBACKS

There are three million and seven hundred thousand people living in North Carolina. If you want to make them mad just stop them from being armchair quarterbacks. The individual's right to express his own opinion and to determine his own action, within the limits of decency, is a proud Tar Heelia heritage.

Listen in on any gathering of friends and you will see what we mean by "armchair quarterbacks." Their conversation probably will include football. Ah, how different the scores would have been if only the "armchair quarterbacks" had called the signals. But it's all in wholesome fun and part of North Carolina life.

Or, by chance, the discussion may get around to how the participating counties and communities should best spend their share of the more than $7,000,000 collected each year in taxes on beer by the state of North Carolina. Some favor using these funds to keep local taxes at a minimum.
Others favor spending the beer tax funds for improved schools, better health facilities and more adequate police and fire protection.

But it makes no difference what the topic. North Carolinians uphold the individual's right to express openly his own opinion and to determine his own action, within the limits of decency. Let's keep it that way.
