Branch Liquor Shops.

Recently Mr. W. A. Bailey, of Advance, who claims to be interested in a distillery in Virginia went to Lexington and employed one W. E. Hanner by the month, furnishing the money with which to secure and pay office rent, to take orders for all kinds of liquors delivered in Lexington by express prepaid. About the same time Mr. J. H. West, a well known liquor dealer in Greensboro, went to Thomasville and established another branch office of the liquor house established in Lexington, with Mac McGhee as manager. Price lists were given out freely, stating the prices at which intoxicating liquors would be delivered.

Things went merry for awhile, but when Lexington Superior Court convened the Grand jury began to investigate this matter. They found true bills against both Hanner and McGhee. It was apparent from the beginning that the judge would charge the jury that if they believed the evidence that both were guilty, and it was agreed that the jury should find the facts and the judge should find the law and upon a special verdict go to the Supreme Court. Evidence was offered by the state. The defendant declined to introduce any testimony. Both these liquor dealers as well as those who employed them seem not to have kept within the law, and have done exactly that which the law says they cannot do. The courts have decided that a citizen from one state can order liquor from another state.
