An old writer says, "When men lived in houses of reed they had constitu-tions of oak, when they lived in houses of oak they had constitutions of reeds. This is a picture-sque description of the injury which may come to us from fine houses too closely confined to keep out the fresh air and too heavily curtained, preventing the entrance of sun-shine, which is almost if not quite as important as air. But it is not at all necessary to have our fine houses unhealthy, and it requires only intelligence and thoughtfulness to render a brick house as good a promoter of health as a cabin. Fresh air will come into well centilated modern houses as well as through the open cracks of a house of reads and smalight through a window in a palace as well us a hovel.

The Mysterious Axman.

[Original] It was a long suff that settled the awaership of the wood lying between the Scarciales and the Kirchoffs, and even then the decision of the court left the ownership of the timber on the property in certain. The Searsdales gained the band a title to which would in law include the timber, but a Kir choff had at one time held a bill of is for the wood, and when the de ten came the Kircheff against whom was rendered declared that no Scars was rendered declared that no Scars-ic should ever carry away a stick of lood from the property. He died soon for making the threat, and Thomas arsenic considered that he might the peaceable possession of both land of limiter. However, there was no casion to cut the wood, and no move as made to do so for many years deed the property remained as it as till Howard Scarsdale became enged to Elsie Kirchoff. Then Howard suchided to build a house for himself of the girl be was to marry in the uter of the woods. Before beginning sold the timber to make way s house to a man who was to take it

The first tree cut down fell on or the men engaged in the work and fled him. Then when it had been avel into logs and they were being awel from the property a chain roke a log rolled down on a man, and oother life was serificed. Some-ody spoke of the threat of the Isir of who has best the suit, and that ded for the fine my attempt to note the timber, for no one would derinke the Job

One night Eitle Kirchoff, who occu ed the family home on the west edge the wood, being nwake, heard the stal of an ax which she fancted came con the spot where her finner had trehased to build their nest. The next ay she told Howard of the circumance. Howard insisted that she must ive been distriken. Not one had been looping in the wood. He made a per-cal estimination, which confirmed hat he had said. But Elsie remained in in maintelying that she had heard a axiom at work. The earers set the bler down in front of earers set the bler down in front of the house to rest, and Eiste shrinking-went out, leaned on the gate and sked what had been the cause of eath. She was informed that a tree that had been partly felled by the first ging of men employed to cut the tim-ber had fallen on the man and killed. m. He was to have been the fore an of the new gang that Howard carsdale had employed The girl paled, gasped and went into

She went immediately for the house. She sent immediately for her lover and implored him to take no further action in making the required clearing. Scarsdale considered the deaths simply a chapter of accidents, but he found Elsie in such a turmoil of emotion that to caim her he promised her that the whole matter should be indefinitely deferred.

Autumn was coming on, and he con-cluded to keep his promise till the next spring, when he would have the Job done without saying anything to Elsie about it. Perhaps he could get her to be absent while it was done. He suc-ceeded in doing this. Eisle went in May to visit a friend, but she had scarcely settled herself to ber friend's house when she experienced an tre-sistible desire to return. This she did the next day, reaching her home at bedtime

Howard had his men ready to enter upon the work of making the clearing the next morning. Before breakfast he received a message from Elste that she was at home and she wished him to come to her. Thinking she had been taken ill, he went to her immediately. Without explaining her sudden return she asked quickly:

"Are you going to cut the wood?"
Howard tried for awhile to equivocate, but, seeing that she would have nothing but the truth, confessed. "Stop it at once," she said excitedly.

"Go and forbid the men to strike a blow. Last night I heard the axman blow Last night I heard the axman again. Oh, do go and stop them?"

While they were speaking there was a crash in the wood.
"Too late?" gasped Eisle.
Howard, impressed with something, he knew not what, started to go to the wood. Eisle held him in a tight embrace. Hearing a shouting, he fore himself may. When he reached the the wood. Eiste held him in a tight embrace. Hearing a shouting, he tore himzelf away. When he reached the point from which the voices came he found that the men had been at work long enough to fell a tree with a rotted core. It had fallen prematurely on one of the men, and the others were try-ing to pry it up so that they could get him out. When they succeeded he was dead.

This is the story they tell about the This is the story they tell about the forest, which is still standing. Not a stick of timber has been removed. After the last accident, as Howard Scarsdale tasked on calling it. Elste refused to marry him unless he would give up brilding on the property, and he compiled, building elsewhere. If you go there and ask why a piece of property and standard to the property and standard to the property and the story of the property and the property and the property and the property as described and the property and the property as described and the property as the property and the property as the property and the proper property so desirable and surrounded by handsome dwellings remains va-cant, they will tell you it is held for a high price. ANCIENT BOWS.

That of the Scythians Was In the Form of the Letter C.

While universally used by the ancients, the form of the bow varied with different nations. The Scythian bow was in the form of the letter C, and was in the form of the Tartars, descendant the bow of the Tartars, descendant the Seythians, still keeps that shape.

The Grock bow was not more than three or four feet in length, but so stout and stiff that it required considiated and stiff that it re of a metaille band. Afterward other material was used in their manufac-ture, but they still retained their original shape. These bows were too short to be of much use, and, compara-tively speaking, but a small portion of the troops were armed with them,

The Romans carried the bow to Britain, where it at once obtained favor and during the middle ages was ex-tensively used, forming an important element of the armies of that period.

The English archers were said to be the finest in the world, and their skill decided the buttles of Creecy, Poitiers and Agincourt. The bows used were of two kinds—the long tow and the arbaiest, or crossbow. The arbaiest was made of steel or horn and was of such strength and stiffness that it was necessary to use some mechanical ap-pliance to bend it and adjust the string. The arbitestiers carried a quiver with fifty arrows and were placed in the van of the buttle.

Blowing the Nese

Medical experts are calling the atten-tion of the public to the importance of performing the nose blowing operation in a scientific and hygienic manner. First one nostril and then the other should be blown without undue vio-lence. Dectors state that the two nasal passages should never be closed at the same time. If they are obstructed, as in the case of a cold, the back of the throat is filled with compressed sir, and this, together with the discharge and the microbes which it contains, may be driven through the custochial tube into the middle car and lead to serious results. A great authority on the subject used to forbid his patients to blow their noses when suffering from a cold. The course is hardly one which will commend itself to those in the habit of catching colds. The best advice would seem to be that when it necessary to blow the nose blowin ould be done gently.—London Mail.
