Private Herman Meisner

****************

The Franco-Prussian war had just opened, and the German army was burrying to the frontier. One morning before the day's march began a young recruit was brought before the colonel of the Eighty-seventh regiment of the line in arrest.

"This is Private Herman Meisner," "This is Private Herman Meisner," said his captain. "Last night he vol-untarily relieved one of the guard and connived at the escape of a prisoner under charge of siceping on post. He admits this, but says that the man be released, Carl Meisner, is his cousin." It happeared that the colonel was a kindly man, one who would naturally be touched by such friendly devotion. The culprit was a mere boy, with Sax-on half and bine eyes.

"How long have you been in the army?" asked the commander.

"Captain, this young fellow is doubt-less ignorant of the enormity of his offense, and we need every man at his port of duty. You may release him. Has the excaped prisoner been rearreston?"

"He has, colonel."

The march was resumed. In the evening as the colonel was refreshing blazer with a sussie the capitals returned with Private Herman Molener.

turned with Private Herman Meisner again in arrest.

"Cedusel," he said, "when the prisoners were hispected after the day's murch Private Carl Melsner was missing, and dais man. Private Horman Meisner, was in his place."

The estated with his traws, what the you do that for, he asked of the buy, "after my lendency to you this morning?"

"They told me my consin would like-ty be shot for steeping on post."
"That is his affair, not yours. Do you want to get yourself shot in his place?"

"I would rather, colonel."

"That's very very ridit very noble of you intit's unjust to yourself. It seems to me, capton, that this boy has the true elements of a soidler in him, but he needs instruction. You may return thin to duty. Has the real prisoner been concressed?"

"Yes, coloner."

The next morning Private Meisner was minin brought before the colonel for having made a third attempt to free his cousin. This time he had fall-ed to even get the prisoner away from the guard. The colonel sent the inthe guard. The colonel sent the in-corrigible Herman back to take his place with the other prisoners, to stand trial at the proper time for mutiny. "You are a little fool," said the com-mander. "Your cousin will be shot for steeping on post, and you will be shot for muliny." Lierman smiled. "Are you sure be's sane, captain?"

asked the colonel.
"Perfectly same."
"Well, take him away."
The next day there was a roar of artillery at the front. As the colonel was mounting his horse the captain appeared and, sainting, said:

"The prisoners desire permission to take their place in the ranks for the coming battle."
