SENATOR OVERMAN

Young in Years, But Ripe in Experience As a United States Senator

Washington, D. C., May 21.—Of all the 31 senators of the class whose term expires in 1915, none is surer from indications to date to succeed himself than the popular junior senator from North Carolina, Lee Overman. Although serving the last year of his second term, Mr. Overman is one of the veterans of the Senate, only 15 of the 95 members of the body antedating him in continuous service. It is a singular thing that the present Senate has an unusually large proportion of members whose service is comparatively brief. Over two-thirds of the membership have served but one term or less. So great a proportion of new material the senate has not had since the very earliest days of its history. Consequently experience in that continuous legislative branch of the government is accounted of peculiar value. When to experience is added high capacity, energy, fidelity to duty and superior tact, the senator inevitably becomes one of the great factors in American institutions. Senator Overman fills the measure of these attributes of worth in his public life as he has done but a small group of men as the political kaleidoscope brings into view in the elevated arena new faces and new characters. From his earliest youth associated with distinguished public men, having been, soon after leaving college private secretary to the famous Zebulon B. Vance, while he was governor of North Carolina, and serving in the same capacity for the succeeding governor, A. S. Merrimon, it was such an environment, rich in opportunity for study of public service, that the present junior senator got his rudiments of official education. For ten years thereafter he served in the legislature of his state, and the last term as speaker. He was the Democratic choice for United States Senator in 1895, but lost through a combination of Independents and Republicans at a time when the Democratic party through disaffections over the free silver coinage issue was suffering reverses throughout the country. Six years later he was elected to succeed to the man who had defeated him—Jeter C. Pritchard—now on the circuit bench through appointment by President Roosevelt.

Senator Overman's prominent place in the United States Senate is attested besides through his character and attainments, by his high committee connections. He is chairman of the all-important committee on rules, the ranking Democrat on the judiciary committee and second on the appropriations committee. Only six other Democrats are his seniors in service length, and as their party appears assured of retaining control of the Senate for some years beyond the next election, Overman's prominence is found to be increased. It is a prominence, it is a heavy weight of responsibility and a constant exertion of energy and ability. Adequately to fill the measure of duty and expectation in such a position requires physical strength only the fewest of men possess. The chairman of the rules committee imposes the most incessant of the requisitions of duty upon any senator. Mr. Overman has discharged his task at that post to the entire satisfaction of his colleagues on both sides of the chamber since the Democratic assumed control with the beginning of the Sixty-Third Congress. He was made chairman of the judiciary's committee to investigate the activities of the "insidious lobby," to which President Wilson called attention early in his administration, with Messrs. Reed of Missouri, Walsh of Montana, Nelson of Minnesota, and Cummins of Iowa, as his associates. The lobby committee, with Mr. Overman presiding, met and organized June 2, 1913. Its first task, set for itself, was the examination of every member of the Senate as to his possible knowledge of any "insidious" or other kind of lobby. It went on with its work throughout the summer, and resumed with the regular session in December. It has so far held 119 sessions, examined 170 witnesses, and has published big volumes of testimony covering thousands of pages. The apparent sentiment as to the service and longevity of the committee is that it is well enough for it to keep intact during the session of Congress, for many of the same interests that formerly evolved and attracted the lobby are still under consideration and will so continue until the adjournment. Senator Overman has scarcely missed a single meeting of the committee. The investigation as published sheds a great flood of light upon the relations of senators individually and collectively with those interested in legislation in a pecuniary way. The North Carolina senator, in the absence of Mr. Culberson, has had to preside and act as chairman of the judiciary committee ever since the chairman left Washington a year ago. It has had to deal with the most important affairs affecting the constitutionality and efficacy of the laws and to amend the Constitution of the United States. In addition it has had to consider the nominations of judges of all the Federal and other courts for which the President has the right of appointment, along with all presidential appointees for the Department of Justice in Washington and throughout the country. These nominations have in no instance been considered in a perfunctory way. The qualifications of every appointee are considered most carefully. The mere fact that he is the choice of the President of the United States is by no means sufficient to insure his success in this ordeal. The judiciary committee, especially under the acting chairman directed to keep its record unblemished and its personnel honorable. Mr. Overman, has lived the letter and spirit of the constitutional rights in that the advice and consent of the Senate is necessary before the choice of the executive can have effect. The judicial department of the government has in the Senate judiciary committee a jealous and vigilant

The Chautauqua

The Asheboro Chautauqua promises to be a joyous week of entertainment. Besides the excellent musical talent rendering delightful concerts, and lectures of educational and educative importance, there will be a number of purely entertaining events.

One of the best of these is the Avon Players, an organization of well-trained college people, in the interpretation of the play "Rada." "Rada" is a weird dramatic poem by Alfred Noyes, the English poet who has recently been widely recognized in America, and secured by Princeton University for a series of lectures on poetry and literature next winter. In the hands of the Avon Players, directed by Mrs. Miram Lee Earley Lippincott, of Swarthmore College, "Rada" is a delight.

The dramatization of the old fairy story, "Cinderella," has been arranged by Miss Anna Oppenlander, director of the Junior Chautauqua movement. Children will especially enjoy this performance. The Avon Players give the lovely old tale all its mystic fairy beauty and make its people real people to the great delight of every child who sees it.

Children and grown-ups as well attend the lecture of Chauncey J. Hawkins, on "Bright Eyes and Wild Hearts of our Northern Woods." His pictures are extraordinary photographs of the animals of which he speaks. Some of woodland and forest scenes in which he has caught natural poses of the animals are in themselves a sheer delight. Mr. Hawkins' pictures have received notable comment in the most important magazines as examples of photographic skill. He has had intimate personal experience with the subjects of his lecture, and he presents his story of them in a fascinating way. The Dunbar Singing Bands, nine men in a band, present a program of action songs, marching songs, male chorus, and lively instrumental music. Their strongest feature is comedy and excellent good humor. They are rapidly becoming famous as the most unique of musical organizations—one of the best attractions of Chautauqua.

Britain Now Spends a Billion.

Great Britain, too, has become "a billion-dollar country." The "budget" introduced in the House of Commons calls for the spending of $1,050,000,000 this year. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, David Lloyd George, plans to raise the extra money by higher taxes on certain luxuries, such as automobiles and big incomes.

WHY WEAK LUNGS?

The toll of tuberculosis is claiming more than 350 victims every day in the United States, yet few realize their grave condition until the critical period arrives. Overwork, worry, weakness after sickness, catarrh, bronchitis, tender throats—all exert the weakening influence that invites consumption. To guard against consumption, thousands of people take Scott's Emulsion after meals because its rich medicinal nourishment strengthens the lungs, puts vigor in the blood, and upbuilds strength to resist tuberculosis. Scott's Emulsion is nature's
