The services for the older people of the community at the M. E. church Sunday was a delightful one and much enjoyed not only by the older people but was an inspiring service to those who have not traveled quite so far on the road of life. Many noble examples were present to bear witness to the worth of the Christian life and to encourage the younger as well as one another in this life.

The writer can sympathize with those fellows mentioned in last week's Courier who ate too much fish and turtle as he, with three others, Paul V. Parks, E. H. Marley and W. E. Marley piled themselves in a wagon on last Thursday evening and journeyed south to the banks of Brush Creek where they made ready to camp and having made a catch sufficient for supper, they prepared the meal in a style which was supremely enjoyed by them, then preparing a bed in a wagon and on the ground and sleeping in rough and tumble style, they spent the night. Rising early they again earnestly pursued their occupation for fish, game, turtles, frogs, etc. which was successful to the extent of satisfying the inner man, and so much so that they don't care for fish any more either for some time. We returned in the afternoon, expressing that this was the best time ever.
