

"GENTLENESS."

There are too many of us young people of today who are too careless with our manners, and especially toward old gentlemen and ladies.

We should be more gentle, more kind at home and abroad.

It will cost us nothing to be polite and kind towards every one we should meet; so let us all try it and see for ourselves. Meet every one with a warm handshake and a smile. See how it will brighten and cheer them up, and they will never forget you for it.

And when they come to see you make them feel at home by greeting them with kindness and a smile. Not with a frown and an act of malice. It will make them feel in the way and wish to be delivered from your presence, and in that you win no love from them, let them be old or young.

Ever be willing to do unto others as you would have them to do unto you. That passive tameness which submits, without struggle, to every encroachment of violence and assuming forms no part of Christian duty; but on the contrary, it is destructive of general happiness and order.

That unlimited complaisance which on every occasion falls in with the opinions and manners of others.

Ungentleness, unkindness, overthrows all steadiness of principle, and produces that simple conformity with the world which taints the whole character in life. True gentleness, therefore, which belongs to virtue, is to be carefully distinguished from the mean spirits of cowards, and the fawning assents of sycophants.

Gentleness requires not only a consistent, firm mind, but it necessarily requires a manly or womanly spirit, and a fixed principle, in order to give it full value.

Now let us find out what "True Gentleness" is. It stands opposed to harshness and severity, to pride and arrogance, to violence and oppression. It is, properly, that part of the great virtue of charity which makes us unwilling to give pain or sorrow to our brethren.

Compassion prompts us to relieve them of their pains and wants, forbearance prevents us from retaliating their injuries.

Meekness, we restrain our angry passions; candor, our severe judgments. Gentleness corrects what is offensive in our manners. Now if we wish success in life and win the hearts of other, we must learn to adopt the manners of candor, gentleness and humanity.

Gentleness and candor have their seat in every good man's heart. Let me add, nothing except what flows from the heart can give satisfaction and pleasure; for no assumed behavior can at all times hide the real character. True gentleness is founded on a sense of what we owe to him who made us, and to the common nature, of which we all share.

It arises from the reflection on our own failings and wants. It is the heart which relents easily, which feels for everything that is human or anything living. Backward and slow to inflict the least wound. Mild in its demeanor, ever ready to oblige, breathing kindness toward friends, courtesy toward strangers. It never meddles with the affairs of others. Its delight above all is to alleviate distress.

If it cannot dry up the falling tear, but to soothe at least the grieving heart. It seeks to please rather than to shine and dazzle. In a word, it is that spirit and that tenor which the gospel of Christ enjoins when it commands us to bear one another's burdens. "Rejoice with those who weep," to be kind and tender hearted, support the weak, and lead the blind.

Now friends, this is the true sense of gentleness which we should all possess within ourselves. There are too many young people who have no mercy on anything living. They are hard-hearted, unmerciful. Well, now, I have kept you reading too long already, but hope you'll pardon me this time.

Yours sincerely, MARY REITZEL.

PERSIMMON IS FRUIT MUCH NEGLECTED

A Persimmon Tree Which Has a Drooping Habit of Growth and Produces Fruit of the Oblong Type.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.) Despite the fact that the only fruit which equals the persimmon in food value is the date, many persons who have persimmon trees on their land are making no use of them, and there has been comparatively little effort made to develop the trees commercially.

In a new bulletin, Farmers' Bulletin No. 685 of the United States Department of Agriculture, some of the many uses to which the fruit can be put are described and methods of propagating the trees discussed.

The persimmon is found in large numbers over the southeastern quarter of the United States and in some places as far west as Iowa and eastern Nebraska, and as far north as Rhode Island, New York and Michigan. The real persimmon belt, however, may be said to extend from Maryland, Virginia and the Carolinas westward through Missouri and Arkansas. Where the tree is most abundant there is considerable prejudice against it because of the persistency with which the young sprouts come up in cultivated fields, and also because of the puckering astringent effect of the unripe fruit.

There is a saying that persimmons are "good for dogs, hogs and 'possums," but this is unjust to a product which can be made very useful to man.

At the present time a few growers in the persimmon belt who have easy access to markets in large cities have built up quite a considerable demand for persimmons, and the wild fruit can also be sometimes purchased during the autumn and early winter. A number of nurserymen also sell seedling trees for ornamental planting, for which they are very effective, and a few have special varieties developed for the production of the fruit.

One obstacle to the more general use of persimmons is the mistaken idea that they are not fit to eat until they have been touched by frost. In consequence many persimmons which ripen and fall to the ground before frost comes are allowed to go to waste. As a matter of fact, it may be said in general that the best varieties are those which ripen just before the trees shed their leaves. If a persimmon is not edible before frost, it is simply because the variety happens to be a late one and the fruit is not ripe. In order to be on the safe side, however, it is recommended in the bulletin already mentioned that housewives who are using persimmon pulp in the preparation of bread, cakes and other
