LOST HORES.

O, the homes that are lost and lonely O, the homes that are sad and dread "And here is a glass that only Gives comfort and strength and cheer!"

Yet the wife in her home is weeping. But who heeds the tears that fall? And the babe in the cradle sleeping-

And the frown of God over all! O, homes that are dim and weary! O, homes that are sad and lone! And the wife's life groweth dreary

And the lips of the baby moun! Yet the man with the liquid fire Still fixes the killing cup; And Truth seems an ancient liar As we lift it and drink it up!

How sweet, if we never knew it, Would the world where we're living

With the sunshine streaming through it. With the cool dews falling free !

How sweet would the blue skies, bend-

Shed beams from the homes above, And the sunlight, never ending, Fall soft on the breast of Love!

But the homes are lost and louely, And the homes are sad and drear; Yet we know that the Christ died only For the poor who are dying here ! -F. L. S. in North Carolinian.
