Soul Saving.

Soul-saving is the ultimate aim in this world of all Christian work. It is well enough to talk of building character and of developing Christian graces and of reforming society. These are the finishing touches to be put on the structure after its foundation and walls are in place, but there is only folly in hanging up painted scenery for a world's admiration while there is nothing but gauze to support this artistic display. Nor do we believe there is any better way of improving character than by keeping forever closely at the task of saving souls. The temple is built by fitting each individual stone and board for its place and this fitting is to be done in forest and quarry, not after the material is placed in the wall.—Central Baptist.

The Country Editor.

Verily, the life of the country editor is a path of thorns. His bread is promises and his meat is disappointment. His creditor chaseth him by day and bad dreams drive sleep from him by night. One subscription is wood and behold it is rotten and soggy and short of measure. His "exchanges" are waded into in a most merciless manner and he is daresome to grunt. He whoppeth up the country politician, who gets elected and knoweth him no more. He puffeth the church fair gratis, and then attendeth it and payeth his dollar and receiveth two oysters. Two young people marry and he giveth them a great puff, they goeth to housekeeping and taketh not the paper. Yes, he is bound with woe and his days are full of grief and trouble and vexation. But sorrow endureth only for a night and joy cometh in the morning. He ploddeh along and endureth in patience and it is written that he will receive his reward at the judgment.—Exchange.

Lynching an Instinct.

A very novel and interesting theory has recently been developed by Dr. J. W. Collins, of Toronto, Ohio, tending to explain the almost irresistible influence which actuates men to mob violence and lynching bees. Coming from a northern man, acting the role of apologist for that species of disorder which is becoming so prevalent in the South—lawlessness which has met with the fiercest denunciation from the northern press—this article should be carefully read by the thinking people of the South.

Writing to the Alkoidal Clinic, a medical journal published in Chicago, Dr. Collins says: "I wish to call attention to a certain condition or disposition that seems to be very clearly marked in the generation of men and women who occupy the most prominent position on 'the stage of life' at this time. It has been demonstrated beyond a doubt that in all parts of this great and glorious country of ours there are men who have an inborn and irresistible impulse to punish crime. When an outrage of an aggravating or horrifying character has been committed, they come together, impelled by one desire and one single purpose, namely: punishment immediate and terrible. When their object has been accomplished they return to their homes, quiet and peaceable citizens. They do not riot or destroy property, except in carrying out their object of the guilty.

Dunn's Latest Enterprise.

A CANNING FACTORY.

CAPACITY 1000 CANS PER DAY.

I buy peaches and tomatoes. I sell in cans and pack fruits to order. I use water, steam and syrup of sugar and pack fruits free from adulteration. Bring your peaches to me and I will save you money, labor, time and cost of glass jars. Fruits properly packed in tin cans retain their original flavor. This is lost in glass jars.

Deliver your peaches to me well assorted. "Presses" in boxes to themselves holding one bushel each. "Clearstones" in boxes holding one bushel each. Gather your peaches when just ripe. Let them be uniform in size and ripeness. Such peaches will bring good prices if they have any size. I shall employ none but neat packers and guarantee satisfaction in prices, cleanliness and quality. You lose no fruits in tin cans. I teach you how to use the same tin can for any number of years. The tin can will not freeze or break and can be filled any number of times during the same season. All ladies who are interested in canned fruits and catchup are invited to visit the factory. Factory located near Main Street, East Dunn.

A Certain Cure for Dysentery and Diarrhoea.

Right Sort of Moods.

It is always a good plan to believe in a person until we prove him to be unworthy of our trust. If we would do this more we would find fewer persons really untrustworthy. It is because people do not trust that there are so many to distrust. Is it not true that we respond to the expectations of others? If we meet a person who feels in good humor, who has all good news and is so full of joy that he seems to think others feel the same, do we not meet his cordial greeting with one hardly a whit less cordial? On the contrary, if we meet with a lachrymose, his hearted person, one who looks through the purple mists of self and self-interest, one who believes all people are suspicious characters, are we not in a measure influenced by this person? Do we not leave his presence with a felling of suspicion, and do we not find ourselves wondering at our faith in human kind, and having this faith turned to unbelief and bitterness? We are people of moods, but we may cultivate the right sort of moods, and we may in a great measure overcome our pre-disposition to discouragement and to looking on the dark side.

Love is blind, and that may be the reason it makes spectacles of its devotees.

A Fox to Catch a Fox.

"Boys," said a shrewd schoolmaster, "we must have closer attention to our books. The first one that sees another boy idle, I want him to inform me, and I will attend to his case."

Presently a boy's hand shot up. "Teacher, Joe Simmons is looking off his book."

"Ah! he is, is he?" cried the schoolmaster. "And how did you know it? Did you see him while you were looking hard at your own book? You may both come forward."

How like this is the greater school of life. People are always trying to catch one another in fault, and nine times out of ten the fault we discover is exactly our own. We would not be so likely to find it if we were not guided to it by some kindred propensity. Have you not noticed how singularly absurd, how unconsciously self-satisfying are the unkind criticisms people make on one another? The moral fox is always catching his brother fox. He seldom catches an eagle or a horse, because he does not understand the ways of eagles and horses. The suspicious person finds everybody suspicious; the dishonest person thinks no one is trustworthy. The uncharitable person is constantly condemning the uncharitableness of others. There is something grotesque, and at the same time pitiful, in this indirect self-disclosure of people who have deeply set faults.

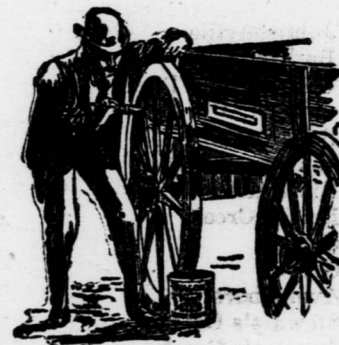

It would be a pretty good rule for each of us to suspect himself in the same particular or particulars in which he finds himself constantly suspecting others. The chances are that we have a tendency to sin along the very lines for which we condemn others. A smart fox-catcher is liable to have a good deal of the fox in him.—James Buckham.

An Advertising Bank.

A Chicago savings bank has increased its business enormously by shrewd advertising in the newspapers. The manager scoffs at the suggestion that advertising is beneath the dignity of a financial institution. "We have induced thousands of care-less people to become savers by daily calling their attention to the advantages of having money laid by," he says. "No concern should be too dignified to tell the people through the newspapers what then should be told."—Philadelphia Record.

A COMMUNICATION.

MR. EDITOR.—allow me to speak a few words in favor of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I suffered for three years with the bronchitis and could not sleep at nights. I tried several doctors and various patent medicines, but could get nothing to give me any relief until my wife got a bottle of this valuable medicine, which has completely relieved me.—W. S. BROCKMAN, Bagnell, Mo. This remedy is for sale by Hood & Grantham.

A Great Programme.

The Richmond (Va.) Carnival will now soon open, and the programme arranged is indeed an elaborate one.

Monday, October 7th, will be Opening Day.—With speaking concerts, and an electrical flash, announcement of formal opening.

At night the Coronation of King and tableaux, Olympian games and fire works will close the day.

Tuesday, Press Day.—Reception of Press. Concerts and parades in honor of visiting Press.

At night, King's first illuminated pageant.

Wednesday, Confetti Day.—Floral and confetti parades and battles, poultry judging, Horse Show.

At night, a grand battle and spectacular concert.

Thursday, Military Day.—Military parades and prize drills.

At night a great sham battle, cannonading, and fire works.

Friday, Children's Day.—Parades of school children, 5,000 in line; jubilee concerts.

At night, King's Grand Mardi Gras Spectacular Parade—twenty floats in line.

Saturday, Carnival Day.—The Big Day.—Spectacular, Oriental, burlesque, and grotesque parades, ending with capture and cremation of the Carnival Sprite at foot of Eiffel Tower.

A score of special entertainers have been engaged. These include Mrs. Murphy, monkey ballroom; Speedy, the high diver; Grant, on the live wire; Japanese acrobats aerial performers, barrel jumpers, the thrilling slide for life, and many others. The programme has been so arranged that these entertainers will perform on the streets each half hour.

Great indeed will be Richmond's "Week of Wonders."

Have you a sense of fullness in the region of your stomach after eating? If so you will be benefited by using Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They also cure belching and sour stomach. They regulate the bowels too. Price 25 cents. Sold by Hood & Grantham.

Anarchy.

The founders of our government believed in laws protecting citizens who respected the rights of others and framed constitutions and enactments on a broad basis of religious and political freedom to all who sought homes and protection under our institutions, but denied license to construe such freedom into criminal action. The law of self-protection is strong and repressive measures are demanded for the suppression of anarchy.

Anarchy is the doctrine of the abolition of government, and supposes a social state in which there shall be no King or President, no Parliament or Congress; no head of law, State or religion. Everything shall be left to individual caprice, and those who believe in use of power, resort to bomb-throwing the pistol, the dagger and murder of every kind.

Shall the government harbor such a brood of vipers as those who, in Chicago, applauded the assassination of the President?

A boy who in early life sets about his work, whatever it may be, in earnest is likely to accomplish greater results. "That so of yours is a born farmer," remarked one man approvingly to another, as he noted the energetic manner in which the lad performed his task. "John always does his level best at everything," was the reply.

That is really the secret of the whole matter; our level best, and stopping at nothing short of it. Lately a man who had distinguished himself in the war, was being entertained in a home where a bright-eyed lad sat at his feet, eagerly listening to the conversation. "Well, my boy," said the gentleman, "of what are you thinking?" "Sir," was the answer, "I mean to be a great soldier like you." "Oh," he said, as he laid bare a hidden scar, "are you willing to pay the cost?"—Selected.
