Use of Perfumes and Disinfection.

A considerable difference of opinion exists in regard to the proprietory of using scent upon Oriental origin and had for its original object the desire to make the person pleasing to the oppo-ite sex. It should be remembered that the basis of all perfumes is an essential oil of some kind, derived either naturally from flowers or leaves or artifically by a synthetic process. In either case the essential oil is a powerful antiseptic and possesses disenfecting properties not less in degree than those of car bolic acid itself. As is well known, the essential oils absorb atmospheric oxygen, forming an unstable compound easily tus oil and turpentine act readily in this manner—a fact which probably accounts for the money for you. salubrity of the air of pine forest and eucalyptvs woods.

The use of scent by many women is excessive, and by men is looked upon as effemi nate-a prejudice that we confess to sharing—and yet the question naturally arises. As we study our environment to please the eye by color and natural effects and to please the ear by musical notes, why should we not make similar endeavor to please the nose by agreeble and fragrant edors? Each sense may suffer offence and there is no reason why defended in this regard. And the use of scent on the pocket
