The stanch upholder of customs often bases his adherence to them upon the ground that they have spring from some natural need of humanity, and therefore have a claim upon our continued allegionce. The first statement is undoubtedly true. But the inference drawn from it is frequently unjustifiable, for it takes no account of changing conditions and changing aims. A custom which was at one time and in a certain state of seciety highly beneficial may, at a later time and in different circumstances, be positively injurious, and the beneficent aim which once inspired it may presently be quite lost sight of amid other and far less worthy motives -- New York Ladger.

Some one has family remarked that reper names escape from the memory as asily as give sed pigs and illustrates the remark with an accedate concerning Joe Jefferson, who rever terget his lines, but has an imperfect resoluction of names. Jefferson had been introduced to General Grant at a time when that distinguished soldier was the lion of the social world, and the popular actor was much impressed with the personality of the hero. A few hours later, as he went up in his hotel elevator, a rugged looking man, with a military bearing, bowed pleasantly to him and made an observation regarding the speed of the elevator, when Jefferson said; "I beg your pardon. Your face is very familiar, but I cannot recall your name. Grant," was the Leonic but perfectly

REMARKABLE CELERITY.

At Least It Seemed So to One Quite Versa tile Young Actress.

The other day I was interviewing a rath er celebrated actress of the lighter stage who before she became, thanks principally to her superb shoulders, such a popular favorite, was, it is rumored, in a very humble position indeed. The interview was getting along very well. I had obtained from her full details as to the reason why she does her hair in the peculiar fashion she affects and had noticed, though not, of course, for publication, that the roots were a different color to the rest.

I had gained ample information as to her extraordinary fondness for her mother and had discreetly forborne to ask her whether she had got that harmless but necessary parent on the three years' hire system or merely week by week. I had praised her wonderful complexion while speculating where she bought it and had obtained her highly colored explanation of the way she had got her diamonds for my paper while keeping my own more prosaic one for myself. Suddenly there came a knock at the door, and her mald entered it with a telegram. She tore it open. It came, she informed me, from the director of a well known French music hall, offering her fabulous terms for her shoulders in a series of living pictures.

"And look," she said, holding out the envelope for me to see, "what a wonderful invention the telegraph is and how quick. This has come all the way from Paris, but the gam on the envelope is still wet."-Pick Me Up.

Insecure Buildings.

If there is any one thing that the public has a right to expect, it is proper precaution on the part of builders to make the structures they erect secure and thus avoid danger to life and property. The records of collapsed buildings, fallen walls, it secure foundations and death traps generally figure up into an aggregate that is simply appalling. The occupant is not supposed to know that the house he lives in is not safe. Indeed it is not his business to know. It is the business of the builder to make everything right, and failing to do this he should be held to the strictest account. The temptation to slight work and to use inferior materials is too strong to be resisted by unsernpulous builders. but the results of such a course are too dis astrons to pass by without notice.

There must be something radically wrong about building inspection when such structures are passed by the officials. The suggestion that the contractor who knowing ly puts inferior materials into buildings should be found guilty of murder in case the buildings collapse will meet with approval from all sensible persons.

The owner orders the work and pays the bill. He has a right to expect exactly what he pays for, and failing to get it the culprit should be punishable by severe pen alties and by the full limit of the law in case his work is so faulty as to collapse either in the process of building or at any reasonable time thereafter. - New York Ledger.

Whist In America.

The impression is general that until recently the Americans have not been a whist playing nation. It is difficult to reconcile this view with the fact that early in this century, when Hoyle was the only authority, various reprints of his works were circulated in the United States-e. g., 'The New Pocket Hoyle" (Philadelphia, 1805), "Hoyle's Games" (Boston, 1814). the same (Philadelphia, 1817). No doubt a diligent search would reveal the existence of other editions. American reprints of Matthews and Bohn are also to be found, dating about the middle of the present century, and the conclusion forced on us is that whist has all along held its own in American society, notwithstanding the contemporaneous popularity of another admirable four handed game-viz, euchre.-Cavendish in Scribner's.
