CCC BOY SAVES MAN FROM WATER-DEATH

Artificial Respiration Brings Life Back To Drowning Youth Wednesday

Knowledge of artificial respiration probably saved the life of George Mundy, 23, of Fletcher at Davidson River swimming pool Wednesday afternoon.

Young Mundy was in swimming with a group of agriculture students from Fletcher high school in the Davidson River pool when he became exhausted and sank in water nine to 10 feet deep.

The unconscious man was pulled from the water by companions after about two minutes, and George Bryan, an enrollee of CCC F-23 applied artificial respiration as it had been taught him by the Army Corps at Lakemont, Ga. Within four to five minutes the near-victim was conscious, and was soon fully recovered without medical assistance. The accident occurred about 3:30, and when the group left the swimming pool an hour later Mundy had practically recovered from the shock.

Attendant Bryan is in charge of the pool as regular life guard.

N. C. Farmers Have Received Huge Sums From AAA Program

North Carolina farmers received $8,893,691.05 cents up to August 13 for their participation in the 1937 agricultural conservation program, E. Y. Floyd, of State College, has announced.

Last year, he continued, growers of this state earned some $9,350,000 by regulating their acreage of soil-depleting crops and by carrying out soil-building practices. Only about $456,300 remains to be paid.

The AAA also gave North Carolina farmers $11,932,52, up to May 31, in "grants of aid," this is, triple-superphosphate given farmers in lieu of part of their payments.

Floyd pointed out that Tar Heel growers as a whole can earn considerably more this year than they did in 1937 if they don't over-plant their soil-depleting crops and if they carry out all the soil-building practices recommended for their farms under the program.

Among the practices for improving the soil are: terracing, applying lime and phosphate, reseeded pastures, growing legumes, and turning under green manure crops.
