A PERFECT GENTLEMAN.

In order to be a perfect gentleman a boy or man must not only look the perfect gentleman, but must act as one. He should keep himself and his clothes as clean and neat looking as possible. He should speak perfect English and never use any language that he will be sorry of afterwards. He should never say anything that will embarrass anyone.

If he is with a crowd he should never try to do anything that the rest of the crowd is not doing. But he should be a big sport and play games with them, or carry on a conversation that is suitable for the occasion, even though it is distasteful to him.

He should always be mannerly and polite. He should always raise his hat when meeting a lady on the street, provided she speaks. And if a perfect gentleman, he will take off his hat when entering a building, unless it is a public building. He would also show his gentlemanly disposition by helping a girl, by carrying her books or by assisting her to put on her cape or coat. He should never interrupt anyone while they are speaking, or join a small group of people who are talking without asking if he is intruding.

Another trait of a perfect gentleman would be his obedience. He should obey his parents at all times and anyone else who has the authority to command him to do anything. He should also be a law-abiding patriotic citizen. When around old folks he should be very considerate of them, because they are so easily irritated as a child. Age deserves respect and esteem. Most of all he should control his temper. If anyone should make an unpleasant remark to him he would show his superior character by not replying. He should not become angry when anyone treats him unfairly in a game. He should control himself and say as little as possible when angry.

TRUTH

To make a poet out of me, There is no use in trying. But if I am made to pay the fee, You'll not find me crying.

I find that words don't fit, Some short and others long. So perhaps I'd better quit, Before it all goes wrong.

MADE-IN-CAROLINAS EXPOSITION

The purpose of these Made-in-Carolinas Exposition is to exhibit the products made in the Carolinas. People do not realize the many products produced until they visit the exposition.

As I entered the exposition building I opened my eyes in wonder. There were so many things to see and I didn't know what to look at first. I started on the left side where different looms were exhibited. The one that attracted my attention most was an old loom like my grand parents used to make their cloth on. There was a loom for weaving silk material, for crepe sheeting, for towels, for gingham and many other kinds of material with various and complicated designs.

Next I saw interior decorations. Beautifully decorated living rooms, bed rooms and dining rooms were ready for inspection, inviting and comfortable looking.

Mrs. Duke was exhibiting her Duke Mayonnaise and serving sandwiches. It seems to me that Mrs. Duke's products are much better since I have seen and talked with her.

We all like candy. You should have seen the Lance Packing House booth. The tempting candy ranging in size from big walking sticks to tiny pieces no larger than a dime were on display. You could not help buying and taking a sample when you passed the booth—at least I couldn't.

It would have been interesting for our chemistry class to visit the exposition. I saw how oxygen is stored in steel bottles. The first plant for the manufacturing of oxygen has just recently been completed in Charlotte.

There was also a booth that showed each step in making aluminum. This was interesting because it is used in every household daily.

My attention was especially attracted by the booth from Cliffside. This booth was very attractive, showing the many patterns of gingham manufactured here and also many pictures of the mill and store.

Hot lunch and sandwiches were served to the people. I do not think any one went away hungry.

because the lunch was served so attractively that no passer-by could resist the temptation to buy something to eat.

On the second floor one booth impressed me very much; it was showing pictures of how the forests of the Carolinas are being destroyed so rapidly by fire. Many interesting placards were posted showing how to prevent forest fires. There were species of different wood and lumber and the products produced by each. A few of the products obtained from pine stumps are: charcoal, wood alcohol, oxolide acid and tar oil.

Large rocks and pieces of granite from the museum at Raleigh were on display. One rock was very beautiful. It was diamond shaped and had many colors.

On one side of the building was a long table showing the many implements used in the army. A German helmet and breast plate, a small switch board and three big bombs which had been used by the Germans in trying to kill our American boys, were on display.

There were fifty-seven booths so I cannot begin to tell you the many things I saw. I hope, however, that these few points will help you to realize the many products made and produced in our own Carolinas.
