"PARAMOUNT ON PARADE"

Stars of the Screen Put On Some Classy Numbers.

(Reviewed by J. C. Lunan)

Paramount parades its stars, dozens of them, in the latest and best of the reviews to come to the Romina. Unlike many of the other reviews produced to date, "Paramount on Parade" has somewhat of a continuity and for that reason if no other, is far ahead of anything of the kind produced to date.

From the opening scene in a dining room, in which Jack Okie makes the round of the stars until the final fade out, there is something doing every minute of the two hour entertainment. And it is exceptionally good entertainment all the way, embracing clever dialogue, dramatic and comedy scenes, catchy songs and good dancing.

Warner Hand who made the character of Dr. Fu Manchu famous on the screen, Clive Brook who revived Sherlock Homes in shadowland, William Powell, the great Phila Vance of the Van Dine murder mystery stories and Eugene Palette, the pompous sergeant of detectives in the Van Dine series, put on a semi-dramatic sketch which has more than one humorous moment.

Then one by one, in song and story, the stars of the parade pass in review, each doing his or her stunt for the entertainment of the masses. Although it is several days since I reviewed the picture, I still remember distinctly many faces that passed in review, folks of the silversheet that have reached the zenith of entertainment heights both on stage and screen. There was Richard Arlen, who perhaps you will best remember for his clever work in Wings, Blonde Jean Arthur, a nice little actress and with plenty of possibilities, George Bancroft, star of "Ladies Love Brutes" and many other successes and who puts on a real sketch showing how things are done at the average party and how you would like to treat the participants.

And, of course, Clara Bow, the "It" girl is there along with Evelyn Brent, that great English actress who is seen in a French bedroom farce comedy playlet with Maurice Chevalier, the present best bet of the Paramount constellation. This playlet is a wow and will make you laugh, gasps and then cover your eyes.

Mary Brian and Buddy Rogers put on a clock scene with chorus and music which proves one of the bright bits of the show and is only outdone by Maurice Chevalier's color number, "Sweeping the Clouds Away". The great Maurice is at his best in this number and he is also heard to excellent advantage in his solo number, "All I Want Is Just One Girl."

Ruth Chatterton, former Broadway star, provides a touching little dramatic offering of the after the war period in France and if you are able to restrain tears at the close, you are undoubtedly tear-proof. Then in rapid order and each doing their turn, you see Nancy Carroll, Gary Cooper, Leon Errol, the man who made the slide famous in "Sally" when it was presented on Broadway, Kay Francis, the best dressed woman in pictures, Skeets Gallagher, Harry Green of Kibitzer fame; Mitzi Green, a child sensation from Lamar, South Carolina whose impersonations of famous stars are startlingly true to life.

Helen Kane, Dennis King, Abe Yman and his band, Lillian Roth, Fay Wray and a score of others are on parade in this great review which was directed ably and well by Miss Elsie Janis, stage star of two decades ago. In addition to the various vaudeville numbers, the musical numbers are both catchy and entertaining. There are eleven song hits in the show and each and every one of them is a good one.

In "Paramount on Parade," there is something to laugh at. Something to thrill to! Something to marvel at! Something to surprise you. From spicy cocktail to salty nuts, the entertainment's complete in "Paramount on Parade," and by all means do not miss it when it comes next Monday to the Romina.

COSTS FARMERS LESS TO SELL BY TELEPHONE

Iowa Association Gets Better Prices for Stock and Farm Produce

As a result of a telephone marketing plan recently put into effect in the State of Iowa, farmers and stock raisers are getting better prices for their hogs, and sales costs have proven extremely low, in spite of a somewhat dull and sluggish market.

The new plan was launched by the Iowa Cooperative Livestock Shippers' Association early in March. The Association has contacts with various local shipping associations. The central agency is located in the City of Des Moines, and it is this agency which handles all the market responsibilities for the farmer. The farmer's only responsibility is to bring his stock to the local association.

Every detail of each transaction is arranged by Long Distance telephone. The best prices for the day are obtained by the headquarters office from scattered markets. Then the prices are telephoned to local shipping associations, the details are consummated, and the stock is finally shipped from the original loading station to the market which offers the best price.

In the few months in which this new telephone marketing scheme has been in effect, the results have proven exceptionally encouraging. During the first month, approximately 100 carloads of livestock were sold through the Association at what has been termed exceptional prices, through selecting markets best suited to the individual association. The central agency headquarters in Des Moines employs sequence calling lists, Long Distance directories, and similar aids. Every morning the various markets and buyers who are in a position to serve the Iowa stock raisers are called, and in this manner the condition of the markets, the day's prices for stock of various classes and weights, and other information is obtained and offered to the various local associations and when these associations acquire a truck or carload of stock they at once get in touch by telephone with the central agency.

When prices are unusually attractive, the members of the local associations that are members of the organization are notified at once and advised to sell any stock they may have on hand, but on days when prices are unusually low the associations are advised to hold their stock for awhile.

NEW LONG DISTANCE OFFICE COMPLETED IN DETROIT

The City of Detroit has a new toll and Long Distance central office, the third largest in the country. This new telephone office, completed this summer, cost almost $3,000,000 and contains many unique features placed in use for the first time. Some of these features will result in savings of thousands of dollars annually in operation and building space costs, one of them, key pulsing, being expected to save more than $120,000 annually in operation costs and approximately $30,000 in building space. It replaces the old key indicator method.

Detroit is one of the most important telephone centers in the country. Equipment installation for the new office has been under construction for more than eighteen months. There are 189 sections of switchboard, ten toll cables, and 3,089 circuits involved in the new office, and more than 600 operators have been in training since February for handling its operation.

Boll weevil infestation in Edgecombe county in early July was from 2 percent to 78 percent. The average was about 28 percent.
