COLLEGE LEADER ASSAILS SCHOOLS

Should Teach Children How To Work As Well As Vote.

Durham, Nov. 9.—Conservative delegates left the lecture hall here Saturday as Dr. Clyde R. Miller, of Columbia University, unleashed a scorching indictment of the modern high school system before a meeting of the North Central District of the North Carolina Education Association.

Dr. Miller, among other things, recommended the virtual abandonment of all the old cultural standbys, Latin, German, histories of ancient wars, and of political campaigns.

These should be scrapped, he said, in order that a new education, teaching children to "grapple with present and future reality" and thus insuring "permanent prosperity" might be substituted.

He told the superintendents they were "either silly or dishonest" if they continued to request funds for operating high schools while believing that education is powerless to help prevent economic suffering.

Monroe Speaks.

The convention adjourned after hearing Dr. Paul Monroe, head of the school of international relations at Columbia University Teachers College.

Dr. Monroe assailed American tariff policies as backward. He said under the present system the length of woman's skirts in America might easily determine whether or not China could finance a revolution. The sudden popularity of bobbed hair, he said, reduced a certain prosperous area in China to desolation because hair nets were no longer necessary.

Dr. Miller told the superintendents their current system of education leaves every generation through which it passes in "almost stark ignorance of economic and related political issues."

"Only by a new education," he said, "with scrupulous honesty and courage in facing and analyzing the vital facts of the living present, can we bring permanent prosperity.

Would Scrap Culture.

"Instead of teaching our children to grapple with present and future reality we continue to train them to believe that a smattering of Latin and Spanish, and algebra and silence will help them to earn a living; that our country is right and never wrong; that the acquisition of great wealth is highly desirable; that current economic and political questions are things which schools must leave alone.

"We continue to train our children to believe," he said, "that the schools should do nothing to help create a better order in which to live: that periodic starvation of millions in the midst of plenty is inevitable.

"If the American high school can do no better, than this it is a matter of small consequence whether it is financed or not."

The depression and how it came about is infinitely more important, declared Dr. Miller, than the fact that all Gaul was divided into three parts, the number of wives of Henry the eighth or the tracing of the campaigns of Charlemagne.

He denied that higher education has any direct relationship with the economy, declaring that "even there

YOUNG TAR HEEL FARMERS MEET

Cool Springs Chapter Outlines Objectives For Year—Interesting Program Is Planned.

The Young Tar Heel Farmers had their first meeting Wednesday, November 4th, and rendered a very interesting program. A willingness on the part of each on the program to do considerable hard work in getting up and delivering their part of the program was very encouraging. A program has been selected for December 2nd and posted on the first floor on the bulletin board and on the third floor in the agriculture room. This program should prove to be very educational as well as entertaining. Probably the most interesting thing about the meeting Nov. 4th was the passing on and adopting the following objectives for our organization to carry out. They are: First, Father and Son Banquet. Second, White Lake Trip during the summer. Third, To help keep the building clean and to cooperate in beautifying the school grounds. Fourth, To co-operate at all times with the school officials and students in maintaining a good name for the Forest City school. Fifth, To keep accurate records on all projects under supervision of the agriculture department. Sixth, To assist in carrying out "Live-at-Home" program. Seventh, To take part in judging, speaking and written contests held for the purpose of Young Tar Heel Farmers. Eighth, To make our organization one of the best in the State of its kind. Ninth, To practice business farming and receive the awards offered for such.

We believe that to be capable of analyzing our problems on the farm will require straight thinking and in order to do that kind of thinking means a lot of work, so with the ample bulk of information that we have in our department we are taking on a new line of enthusiasm, and an optimistic attitude toward the out-look for the future farmers.

Rutherfordton, Nov. 11.—Senator Cameron Morrison addressed the Rutherfordton Kiwanis club and visitors here Tuesday night. He was introduced by Attorney M. L. Edwards as a leader, statesman and pioneer good roads builder. Senator Morrison stated that he would like to discuss the depression and other subjects, but he made an earnest appeal to all American citizens to be loyal to their country in times of depression.

If we will be loyal to constitutional representatives of a free government we will come through this depression all right, he continued.

"In some of our great cities there are folks who stand on the street corners and attack our government" he said, "We have in this country a mild form of philosophy and po-

"No one class should rule this country, but all should help govern it. Political parties are necessary. If I was not a democrat, I would be a republican, as bad as some of their traits are.

"This government stands on principles, not selfishness. Class hatred and class prejudice is what is the matter with some of the old world countries tonight. We need to seek justice in this country. We can differ without malice and hatred. I ask each of you to think as to what can be done in this time of unemployment and distress."
