Congressman Has a Real Museum

The only museum on Capitol Hill in Washington is found in the office of Representative Clyde Kelly of Pennsylvania, who has been collecting interesting curios from many parts of the world for over fifteen years. In it are found grim relics of the World War and odd objects from the South Sea Islands. A place of honor is accorded the lightly polished horse shoes with which Mr. Kelly won the championship of Capitol Hill last summer. The photograph shows Mr. Kelly holding his latest exhibit, a tortoise shell medicine rattle presented to him by the Omaha Winabago Indians, of whom he is honorary chief.
