MARSHALLBERG

Wednesday night quite a number of people gathered at the Methodist parsonage to meet the new minister and his wife. The number was not as large by any means, as it would have been had the weather been more pleasant. Nevertheless every one seemed to get acquainted and soon found themselves enjoying the fine Victrola and games.

The girl "Reserves" did their best to make every one have a nice time and it wasn't long until the older people were as young as any one there when it came to playing games.

Later in the evening refreshments were served. Those present were: Rev. and Mrs. Wall, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Nelson, Capt. and Mrs. John Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. Leon B. Lewis, Mrs. Ruth Nelson, Mrs. Colon Wilson, Mrs. Warren Lewis, Mrs. Ruth Whitehurst, Mrs. Virgil Harris, Mrs. Chas. Willis, Mrs. Lida Davis, Misses Zeulekia Nelson, Mildred Nelson, Lillian Nelson, Edith Davis, Thelma Harris, Rebecca Gillikin, Catherine Nelson, Master Clifton Nelson.

When the hour arrived for leaving, the pastor asked all present to assemble in the living room and sing "Blest be the Tie that Binds," after which he led in prayer. It was an evening to be remembered.

SWEET POTATO SOFT ROT CONTROLLED WITH HEAT

By F. H. Jeter)
Raleigh, Nov. 24—Proper heating of the curing house is a simple and effective method of preventing the spread of the soft rot fungus and also does away with the dangerous practice of sorting out after the potatoes have been stored.

"When soft rot is observed as indicated by the presence of sour flies, the heat in the curing house should immediately be increased to 90 degrees F." says Dr. R. F. Poole, plant pathologist at the Agricultural Experiment Station. This temperature should be maintained until all flies have disappeared and the diseased potatoes have mummified. The house should be well ventilated during the heating period as this dries out the surface of the sweets adjacent to the infected potatoes and checks the spread of fungus. After the diseased potatoes are thoroughly dried out they can be left among the healthy sweets for the rest of the storage period.

Mr. Poole states that after the potatoes are once stored and the curing process begun, they should not be moved for any purpose except for immediate sale. When this is done the potatoes are bruised and, owing to the process of curing, the healing is very slow and the infection will spread through this raw tissue. Due to the fungus growth within a few days after storage every potato, even in the best regulated houses, will be exposed to a greater infection than when first stored and for this reason alone the sweets should never be handled after curing starts, he says.

The early cool fall season together with an abundance of moisture in some areas has greatly favored the parasite and in many cases the infection has been carried into the curing house on potatoes that were affected but did not show any signs of decay, says Dr. Poole. This infection cannot be helped but the spread of the fungus can be checked by proper heating and ventilation, and the exercise of proper precaution in handling, he says.

Long Suffering Finds Happy End

There wasn't a day for 20 years that my stomach didn't give me trouble. I used to have awful pains in my back and sides; my kidneys had me up many times during the night; my liver was inactive and I had severe headaches. I had taken all kinds of medicines and treatments but my first real benefit came thru Sargon. I eat and enjoy my food now without a trace of indigestion; I never have to get up nights and all my troubles have disappeared.

"Sargon Pills relieved me of long standing constipation and I haven't had a bilious dizzy spell since I started them."—Mrs. Cora Peterson, 42 Center St., Asheville.
