CURATOR OF MUSEUM BRIMLEY APPOINTED

hibits 17 years ago.

Born at Cape Hatteras July 7, 1896, son of a pioneer physician along the outer banks there, Davis first attended school under a private teacher, went to high school at Beaufort, N. C., attended the University of North Carolina where he received his A. B. degree in 1910 and Masters degree a year later. During 1918-1920, he was laboratory assistant and instructor in the Geology Department at the University. At intervals during and after high school, Davis lived and worked on a farm in Carteret County, did commercial fishing, ran a freight boat, and did small contracting jobs, including a long wooden seawall in front of Beaufort.

Brimley, born of a family that had been farmers for generations, moved from England to North Carolina with his mother and father two brothers and two sisters, late in 1880 after accidentally contacting the late Samuel J. Fall, immigration agent in the employ of the State Department of Agriculture. Farming unsuccessfully for a year, he then became a teacher in a one-room log cabin in House's township before beginning custom taxidermy work with his brother, C. S. Brimley. He has been identified with the collection and preparation of natural history objects for nearly half a century.

During his 42 years with the Department, Brimley has witnessed the increase of visitors to the Museum from a few hundred a month to 200,000 a year and the increase of floor exhibit space from 2,000 square feet to 30,000 square feet.

The giant Right Whale, 50-foot mammal that greets the visitors as they enter the Musum, was just a pile of bones on the floor in 1894 when Brimley was given the temporary job of mounting the skeleton, a job that lasted several months.

When Brimley became curator of the Museum in 1895, there were no funds for securing and preparing specimens, nor were funds available for janitor service. He learned to push a fast carpet-sweeper and wield a duster before and after closing hours and many specimens of fish that he mounted 53 years ago for the State Fish Commission attest his ability as a preparator-curator.
