Trawlers Ride Out A Storm In Bight Of Cape Hatteras

A fleet of 10 Virginia trawlers experienced one of the roughest blows of the current winter last Wednesday night in the vicinity of Cape Hatteras, it was reported in Morehead City Sunday by Capt. Felton Forest, master of the dragger Janet of Hampton, Va.

The wind was from the northwest so the protected waters in Cape Hatteras Bight offered a fair anchorage, but members of the Janet's crew and seamen aboard other trawlers in the vicinity stated that the weather was plenty rough. Throughout the night, the crews were fearing that the wind would shift to the southeast and if that had been the case the vessels of the fleet would have been in a very precarious situation.

On Diamond Shoals, a short distance away from the spot where the fleet anchored during the blow, the late Anne Mae of Hampton, another trawler was lost during a gale back in 1931.

Valuable Fishing Rig At Carteret Hardware Attracting Attention

Attracting much attention from persons passing Carteret Hardware Company during the past few days in a fishing rod and reel and accessories. What also attracts attention is the price tag which reads "$475.00 Complete." J. H. Neal manager of the firm stated that the rod has been sold and that it was a special order placed by one of his customers.

The rig is a product of Edward Vom Hofe, famous throughout the world as the makers of fine salt water fishing tackle. The reel, which is built into the seasoned hickory rod is a size 14-0 capable of holding 1,000 yards of 39 thread line. It is the type of rig used by big game fishermen in waters where marlin and other huge fighting fish of the ocean are found. Someday—someone will catch a marlin off Cape Lookout in the Gulf Stream and such tackle as that now on display in Carteret Hardware Company's window is likely to become quite common in these parts.
