Encourage the Use of Water Power.

Ours is a large country, with a vast development of wealth. This wealth is so massed and specialized that it can bring to pass great and beneficent results. The remedies against the dangers of monopolistic tendency do not lie in the disintegration of capital, or in attacks upon large associated enterprises. The remedy lies rather in direct regulation and control in the public interest. Let those who have the capital and the ability develop our water powers. The rivers will continue to flow in their natural channels, and the cataraacts cannot be removed bodily to Wall Street. The water-power company will always be dependent upon the patronage of the region tributary to the particular water power in question, even more than the community will ever be dependent upon the company that develops and sells the power. If Mr. Ballinger's principles of regulation and control are accepted by Congress, as they ought to be in the present session, we should have an end of the talk about a "power trust" invading the public domain. If the principles that the New York State Commission proposes to practice, with the sanction of the Legislature, should go into effect, a fine example would be set that other States could follow. Every State for itself would have it in its power from time to time in the future to protect its people from any possible encroachment by a trust or combination exploiting the power of streams as a commercial resource.

At the present time, generally speaking, water powers have very little value beyond that which the developing companies create by risking the capital necessary for development and by large outlays for machinery and plants. Any future "unearned increment" pertaining to the monopolized control of water-power is always within grasp of the community itself through the principle of taxation. If, in addition to the principle of taxation, the national or State government uses the principle of the lease with periodic revaluing, there can be no possible danger to the general interest. The conservation of so many other things depends upon our utilizing water-power that the burden of proof should be wholly upon those who would do anything to check or retard the building of dams and the electrical transmission of power. Veterans in Congress.

Boston Transcript.
The death of Senator McLaurin, of Mississippi, brings the number of ex-Confederates in the Senate down to eight—Bankhead, Johnston, Taliaferro, Bacon, McEnery, Money, Daniel and Martin. If we reckon Senator Bradley's intention as equivalent to service there are now nine ex-soldiers of the Union among the senators (Bulkeley, Dupont, Bradley, Burrows, Nelson, Warner, Aldrich, Scott and Warren). Senator Bradley when only 14 ran away from home and joined the Union Army, but was taken out of the ranks by his father, who insisted on rights to nullify the enlistment as without his consent.

Time was when the ex-Confederates in Congress greatly exceeded in number the Union veterans. This came about because practically the entire population of the South of military age and sex took up arms in the struggle, whereas only one-half of that of the North felt obliged to do so. And practically all the men from the South in Congress today of the Civil War age are Confederate veterans; but the small number to which these have fallen shows how rapidly the generation which has grown up since 1850 is coming to take their places. Roosevelt was the first Republican president since Lincoln who was not in the Union service, and Taft is the first Republican president without a military record.

A Night Rider's Raid.

The worst night riders are calomel, croton oil or aloes pills. They raid your bed to rob you of rest. Not so with Dr. King's New Life Pills. They never distress or inconvenience, but always cleanse the system, curing Colds, Headache, Constipation, Malaria, 25c, at Freeman Drug Co.

Preventing Hasty Marriages.

New York Times.
It has long been a rather widely recognized rule of jurisprudence that anything which tended to make marriage either expensive or difficult was against public policy, and, of course, in more ways than a few that idea is true. According to another view, however, and one that is gaining ground among careful observers, while some obstacles to marriages are harmful, there are others which it is desirable to interpose—obstacles not insuperable for anybody, and yet large enough to provide at least the opportunity for deliberation before the assumption of life's gravest responsibilities.

Only a few days ago we quoted Professor Howard, of the Nebraska University, as saying that better marriage laws were much more needed than better divorce laws, since the former would decrease the numbers of persons resorting to latter, and so, to whatever degree they were effective, prevent a social danger instead of trying to cure it. The Rhode Island plan is to make its marriage licenses invalid until five days after issue. This is an extremely simple expedient, but, of course, that is nothing against it, and the expectation is that the interposition of this delay between the issuance and the use of the marriage license will save the state from continuing to be, as it long has been, a favorite resort for runaway or clandestine couples who for one reason or another find it unpleasant to get married in their own state or impossible to get married there as quickly as they wish.

Borrowed Sports.

Manchester Union.
It is no uncommon thing for business, educational or other methods and customs which have proved eminently successful in one country to be adopted in another country. Any new scientific discovery, wherever, and by whomsoever made, is a contribution to the knowledge and advantage of all nations. The application which each country makes of this knowledge is sure to be noted by other countries, and, if superior to their own application, adopted by them. It is by this interchange of ideas that the world has arrived at its present stage of advancement, and by similar exchange it will continue to progress.

So it is in sports. Most of those which we enjoy in the United States are importations, in identical or modified forms, of sports which other countries have enjoyed before us. The American game of football is commonly acknowledged to be an offshoot of the English game of Rugby. Golf is essentially Scotch, and so on. In turn the American game of baseball is played with enthusiasm in Japan and in other parts of the world. Now come the American consuls in England, Scotland and other Ireland with a report that rollerskating, which had heretofore been regarded as a distinctively American diversion, has become tremendously popular in those islands, and that huge rinks are springing up at every convenient place.
