A Constant Protection

A telephone on the Farm affords the Farmer's family freedom from isolation as well as protection in the absence of the men.

Mr. S. S. Lee, of Blanch, N. C., writes: "Some time ago one of our friends' husband was compelled to be off until ten o'clock at night. During that time no one was in the house but his wife. She talked to us all up and down the line, and each family was ready to go to her at a minute's notice. She said she was so glad she had a phone, as she would not feel at all lonely."

Write for our free booklet and see how little it costs to have a telephone on your Farm. Address

...a Quaker. The applause which followed this declamatory was even more vigorous than the style to which Colonel Roosevelt had made it.

Colonel Roosevelt declared the present fight to be more than a mere fractional fight, more than any mere ordinary political contest. "I am fighting for the rights of the plain people everywhere," he said, "and I feel that I have a right to the support of every heir of the old North Carolina Whigs, but every heir of the Jacksonian Democrats. The speaker declared that he stood for the principle in which the great bulk of the people of the south believe and expressed the personal belief that they were kept away from him only because of an idle name. "I am going to do my best to make you vote as you feel, with regard to names," he warned. "I am going to fight, and when I fight, I fight," he declared with an emphasis which was not missed by his hearers. Colonel Roosevelt then reiterated his purpose of coming into North Carolina and waging a campaign in the event he was nominated for the Old North State, to vote right in the next electoral college, and declared with an enthusiasm which was immediately taken up by those of the audience who held similar hope.

Touching his platform he declared that it was founded on the fundamentals of American citizenship. "We are standing for the right of the people to rule," he said, "and also for the people to rule in a spirit of righteousness; to rule so as to do justice to every man and every woman within the boundaries of our great nation."

Colonel Roosevelt thought that on the fourth of July every star pattered in the country would press a sentiment similar to one he had just felt and spoken. "But he forgets it when Congress meets and when Congress comes together." Continuing in this vein Colonel Roosevelt said: "I ask you to stand up to those who live up to their four of July professions when Congress and the legislature come together. We are standing for the right of the people, not merely to vote at elections; we are asking that the rule of the people be made genuine and not a sham, and I am only appealing to you each one of you here, you North Carolinians, what each one of you do in your own life. You each of us, wants to rule his life."

"I know that now and then we make mistakes, but they will be my mistakes, and I want to make them myself. If I make them I won't make the same mistakes. If somebody else makes them for me, I don't know often he will make them. The same with the people as a whole. I know that occasionally we make mistakes, but I know also that history has taught that the American people make very much fewer mistakes in governing themselves than outsiders will make in governing us."

It was in making comparison of his idea of the people's judgment and the president's gauged through his public expression that Colonel Roosevelt first mentioned the name of Taft, his opponent for the Republican nomination. "Mr. Taft," began Roosevelt with a pronunciation of the name which was new to these parts," said the other that he distrusted the impulsive judgement of the people would a great deal rather the deliberate judgement of people than their impulsive judgement but if I have got to choose I will take the impulsive judgement of the people every rather than the deliberate judgement of the bosses and politicians.

Again the other day President said he tried the difficult task of improving Graham Lincoln. Lincoln said was to be a government of people, for the people, by people Mr. Taft suggested improvement that it was to government of the people representative part of the people. In actual practice we call who that representative would be by looking at the who are managing Mr. campaign. Senator A. Messrs. Guggenheim and in Colorado, Mr. Barnes, a misunderstood man known Boss Barnes in my own Mr. Lorimer in Illinois, Mr. rose in Pennsylvania. Mr. mer and Mr. Penrose at
