Another Portrait of Roosevelt.

As A companion piece to the composite Tory portrait of Col. Roosevelt, presented in those columns yesterday, we offer today a contrasting view of his character and achievements, this sketch being also contributed by several hands.

We think this is no more than fair. Our presentation of the Tory picture was as complete as space would allow. Single epithets make but single lines in the portrait; we did justice to the artists by grouping more than one hundred into a harmonious whole, from the delicate shading of "hypocritical and dangerous demagogue" to the robust coloring of "neurotic," "anarchist" and "maniac." Now we purpose to hang a pendant likeness, commending to the public a study of the two examples of portraiture.

First we shall quote from Dr. Lyman Abbott's "Theodore Roosevelt As I See Him," in the current Outlook. If it be objected that he is a partisan, by that objection he acquires the same authority as Mr. Taft, Mr. Debs and the Tory newspapers have on the other side.

Answering the frequent charge that in many of his public acts Roosevelt "trampled on the constitution," Doctor Abbott cites this fact: "During his terms as governor of New York and as president no executive act of Mr. Roosevelt's and no legislative which he recommended has ever been declared unconstitutional by the courts." As to personal traits the close associate of the "blatant demagogue" and "madman" of the Tory press sees him thus:

Mr. Roosevelt abhors that which is evil. He hates with a perfect hatred impurities, meannesses, falsehoods, shams, dishonesties. He is fighting honest. * * * It is true that he is rash, heedless or impetuous. Present any problem to him, and he instantly sees all its conditions and forms his judgment, not without careful thought, but without the delay involved in deliberation. I have not always at first agreed with him, but when I have given to the problem the deliberate study which my temperament requires, I have come either to the conclusion that Mr. Roosevelt was correct or that the difference between us was less than I had thought.

The key to his character is his vital interest in his fellowmen. * * * This spirit makes him the fellow of all sorts and conditions of men at once a cultivated gentleman and a thoroughgoing democrat. It is a spirit not only of interest in his fellow-men, but of respect for them. His belief in the common people is not merely a political principle; it is a fundamental faith. This faith makes him the reverse of opinionated or headstrong.

Doctor Abbott recalls the time of Roosevelt's decision to make this fight.

We all thought the campaign would be a forlorn hope. We all believed that could Mr. Roosevelt remain in retirement till 1906 Progressive principles would be certain of victory. But we all agreed that he no option but to accede. * * * He entered on the campaign at the call of honor, when ambition ease and personal inclinations all combined in urging him to resist the call.

Thirteen years of increasingly intimate acquaintance with Col. Roosevelt has steadily deepened my affection for him personally, my esteem for his character and my admiration for his political genius and his public services.

Close observation for thirteen years has failed to disclose to Dr. Abbott the "hypocrisy," "indecency" and "blackguardism" in Roosevelt which are so patent to Tory critics. Let us leave him in his blindness. Let us hear testimony from other quarters.

Roosevelt is now a candidate for the presidency. He is opposed and denounced on the ground that he is mentally and morally unfit for that office. This is what the Washington Post, now a leading Taft organ, said when he had completed his term.

The foremost man of his time passes into private life. Mr. Roosevelt's pioneering in a hundred different paths; his bold attack upon long-established evils his impregnable place in his hearts of the people—these have made him an ideal model and pattern for shoals of counterfeit "reformers" and imitators. The more Theodore Roosevelt was tested by fire and found to be pure gold the more eager were charlatants to imitate him. The esteem and gratitude of the American people will follow Mr. Roosevelt to Africa, and all patriotic men will wish that in due time he may return and devote his remarkable powers to the welfare of his country.

It was of the man who is the target of unparalleled abuse that John Hay, great secretary of state said this:

Of gentle birth and breeding, yet a man of the people in the best sense; with the training of a scholar and the breezy accessibility of the ranchman; a man of the library and of a man of the world; a soldier and a statesman; a reader and a writer; a maker of history; one who never did and never could turn his back on a friend or an enemy. A man whose merits are so great that he could win on his merits alone, whose personality is so engaging that you lose sight of his merits.

Hear another distinguished citizen, now an enemy of Roosevelt: No people can maintain a free government who do not in their hearts value the qualities which have made Theodore Roosevelt conspicuous among the men of his day as a type of noble manhood. God grant that those qualities of brave, true manhood shall have honor throughout America shall be held, for an example in every home and that the youth of generations to come may grow up and feel that it is better than wealth or office or power to have the honesty, the purity and the courage of Theodore Roosevelt.

Men say he is not safe. He is not safe for the men who wish to prosecute selfish schemes for the public's detrimen. He is not safe for the men who wish to drag the president into a corner and make whispered arrangements which they dare not have known to their constituents. But I say to you that he has been as president the greatest conservative force for the protection of properly and our institutions since the day of Washington. I would rather have my boys
