Fire Breaks out in University Building

Chapel Hill, Nov. 8.—Fire which was discovered about 8:30 tonight in the physics room of the alumni building at the University of North Carolina destroyed an x-ray machine, burned the wainscoting along one side of the wall, ruined a blackboard and generally played havoc in the room. The loss amounts to about $1,000. But for prompt work by students who discovered the blaze accidentally the fire might have been serious, the alumni building is the administrative office and contains data that cannot be replaced. The fire is thought to have started in some of the electrical connection of the x-ray machine, which in itself is worth over $250. All the windows and doors were closed. With no doubt draught the fire progressed slowly. When the alarm was given students swarmed around the building and formed a bucket brigade, which quickly stopped the blaze. The loss is completely covered by insurance.
