Terraced on the side of the mountain were the vineyards of Engedi. Oh, they are sweet places: From a shelving of the mountain, 400 feet high, waters came down in beautiful baptism on the faces of the leaves; the grapes intoxicate with their own wine; pomegranates with juices bursting from the rind; all fruits, and flowers, and aromatic woods—among the sweetest of these the camphire plant of the text. Its flowers are in clusters like our lilacs—graceful, fragrant, symbolical of Jesus; for "my beloved is unto me as a cluster of camphire from the vineyards of Engedi."

Some years ago I discoursed to you about "the white hairs of Jesus," and some of the newspapers supposed it was a mere faucy of my own—the poor fools not knowing that in Revelations, the first and the four tenth, the Bible speaks of Christ. We Appeal to Experience

We Appeal to Experience.

For a long time we steadily refused to publish testimonials, believing that, in the opinion of the public generelly, the great majority were manufactured to order by unprincipled parties as a means of disposing of their worthless preparations.

That this view of the case is to a certain extent true, there can be no doubt.

At last, several years ago, we came to the conclusion that every intelligent person can readily discriminate between spurious and bona fide testimonials, and determined to use as advertisements a few of the many hundreds of unsolicited certificates in our possession.

In doing this, we published them as nearly as possible in the exact language used by our correspondents, only changing the phraseology, in some cases, so as to compress them into a smaller space than they would otherwise occupy, but without in the least exaggerating or destroying the meaning of the writers.
