

It is probable that when the silver bill is taken up for consideration in the Senate tomorrow Senator Jones of Nevada, will make the second great speech of his life. It is an open secret in the Senate that the duty of reporting the silver bill of the Finance Committee and steering it through the Senate was assigned to Mr. Jones for the purpose of giving him an opportunity to show his prospects for re-election. His term expires next March, and there are several ambitious gentlemen who will endeavor to succeed him. Among them, it is understood, is Mr. F. G. Newlands, the wealthy Californian who has recently been making heavy investments in Washington real estate. In 1876 Senator Jones made the most exhaustive speech on the subject of silver ever delivered in Congress. He spoke for the greater part of three days. The speech was generally regarded as a very able one, and drew attention to him as a man of good attainments. The speech showed the evidence of hard study, and Mr. Jones has ever since been looked upon as one of the strong men in the Senate. His forthcoming speech will not be so long as his former one, but it is looked forward to by the Senators with much interest.

The farcical ending of the investigation made by Senator Dolph's special committee into the methods by which executive session secrets reach the public, has caused the Oregon Senator to be placed side by side with Senator Call, of Florida, as one of the huge jokes of the Senate chamber. Senator Call is not always amusing, because sometimes he is an awful bore. Senator Dolph got no chance to bore his brother Senators; hence they look upon him as a sort of amusing element in the otherwise solemn body. His committee was in existence nearly two months. It examined a large number of witnesses, including all the Senators, spent $2,000 of the public money in witness fees, and having accomplished nothing, was allowed to quietly die. A few days ago the five correspondents who refused to give the names of the Senators who have been in the habit of furnishing them with executive session secrets walked into the disbursing officer's room, and received a check for $153 each. This represented the Government fee as witnesses for fifty-one days at the legal rate of $3 per day. No better proof could be offered of the utter recklessness with which public men, especially Congressmen, spent the money of the Government.

Fully one thousand people attended a meeting held in New Orleans on Wednesday evening last to protest against the proposed rechartering of the Louisiana Lottery Company. Several prominent citizens made speeches charging various evils against the lottery company, and appealing to the people to wipe out its baneful influence in Louisiana. One of the speakers asserted that the Louisiana Lottery Company dictated to the press of New Orleans, and that it was impossible for a man to express an opinion in opposition to the lottery company in the columns of a New Orleans paper. The lottery company will make a proposition to the next Louisiana Legislature to pay the State $500,000 a year for twenty-five years for rechartering the company for that length of time. Most of the New Orleans papers favor the proposition, but it is understood Governor Nichols will strenuously antagonize it.

The Rev. William Barnes, who preached the funeral sermon of Daniel Webster, died in Jacksonville, Ill., on Friday last. He was a Presbyterian divine. Mr. Barnes was born in Ohio in 1816, and was a Harvard graduate in the same class that numbered among its members Charles Sumner and Edward Everett. He was pastor of a church in Boston when Webster died, and was chosen as officiating clergyman during the last thirty-five years he had lived in the West, most of the time in Jacksonville. He was a life director of the American Bible Society and also of the American board of home and foreign missions.

At St. Augustine's Catholic church in Washington City, last Sunday Archbishop Ireland preached a sermon to negroes and told them they are equal of the white man. He also said that there is no color line. The solution of the question was that they should look one another in the face as members of the same family, children of the same God, and all being under the same teachings of the Holy Spirit, and that of the simple accident of color it did not follow that they were treated on different lines religiously and socially.

The New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger says: "The colony of Southerners in New York is large and influential. In law, in commerce and in finance, Southern men of brains and wealth have attained eminence in this city, and it can be safely said that there are more leading Southerners living here now than there are in most of the Southern cities. Another evidence of this fact is exhibited in the reorganization of the Commercial National Bank. This institution has changed its name to the Southern National Bank, and has increased its original $200,000 to $1,000,000 in now conspicuous important Southern interests. President Cass Adams presides, and is succeeded by W. W. Huntington, formerly of Virginia. James Buchanan, recently United States Bank examiner in Texas, was selected vice president. These new directors were elected, one of them being John C. Calhoun. L. E. Bergeron, of Galveston, Texas, has been chosen assistant cashier."
