LIBRARY NOTES. The following dispatch from Seattle, Wash., will be of interest to all book-lovers: For the first time in the annals of literature a blanket Indian squaw and a white woman of culture have collaborated in the production of a book and a daintily beautiful book it is, called "The Maid of Pend d'Oreille," daintily bound in birch bark.

The author of the charming "Little Indian" poem is Miss Lucy Byrd Mock of Fayetteville, Ark., who has been spending the past year in the north-west and who has become imbued with the spirit of the "glad, wild west." While she was writing the poem the Indian woman were gathering the bark, with which the books are tied. Most of this work was done by the Indian girls of Neah Bay, on Cape Flattery, the westernmost portion of the United States proper. The cover of the book is ornamented with an ideal head of an Indian maiden and the poem tells the story of an Indian princess, who lived on the banks of Pend d'Oreille and who threw herself into the water when deserted by her fickle lover, a Hudson Bay trader.

Miss Mock, who writes under the name "LeMoqueur," has adopted the meter and form of Kipling's "Mandalay" and has put between the pretty birch bark covers with their Indian ornamentation a beautifully written and illustrated poem which is really what its author declares, "a breath of the west." It brings to us the spirit of the great mountain, silent except for the music of the cascade which pours down its steep sides, the tall trees which seem to meet, and kiss the skies in gladness and the Great Spirit which is upon the water. Amid such "subtle charm and mystic grandeur" the author lets us follow the little Maid until the mirrored Pend d'Oreille hides her sorrow and cheats a mournful cadence in her memory.

THOMPSONS

MUSIC

The great organ which is being installed in the new Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York city, is approaching completion. Though in the number of stops this organ is slightly smaller than a few other instruments, in point of completeness, however, both as regards tone, color and volume, it will have no superior. Several years were spent in its construction, and these "great work of art," as the builder calls it, will cost $70,000. It is built in two divisions, placed on either side of the chancel or choir of the Cathedral, and 50 feet above the main floor. The southern division of the instrument is operated by a 15 horsepower electric motor, and a 7 1/2 horsepower motor is used for the northern division. Each division occupies the space of a good sized house, and each is packed with ranks upon ranks of pipes. The largest of these is ag reat wood-conduit 32 feet long, the sound of which more closely resembles a gusty rumble than a musical tone. The smallest is a thin lead of tin, not even as large as a lead pencil. Its sound is similar to the shrill singing of a teakettle. Between these two extremes there are almost 7,000 other tones.

The console, which corresponds to the keyboard of a piano is behind the top of the choir stalls on the south side and is reached by a spiral from stairway inside the organ case. Carved on the back of the console is this inscription: "This organ is given for the praise of the Blessed Trinity and in loving memory of Lena Kearny Morton, 1895-1904, by her parents, Levi and Anna Morton."

Miles Farrow, a former Baltimorean to whom has fallen the prize of the coveted position of organist of the Cathedral, is well known here having played in Madison Avenue Synagogue in Christ church and in St. Paul's. One cannot wonder at Mr. Farrow's enthusiasm over the great instrument he is to play. When he shows his visitor the console, with its mahogany case, its four manuals or keyboards, its rows of ivory register knobs (103 of them in all), its 101 speaking stops, its 31 couplers and its 33 pistons, he betrays his eagerness to have all that wonderful, complex mechanism turned over to him. He would like to give a series of recitals in February and March, but it is understood that the Cathedral will not be formally used until next Easter.

One Good Thing About It. "There is at least one good thing about the big wads of hair the waitresses seem to be proud to wear." "What is it?" "It comes so high that they can't afford to drop any of it in a fellow's 'visuals.'"—Chicago, Record-Herald.

ESCAPED WITH HIS LIFE. "Twenty-one years ago I faced an awful death," writes H. B. Martin, Port Harrelson, S. C. "Doctors said I had consumption and the dreadful cough I had looked like it, sure enough. I tried everything I could hear of, for my cough, and was under the treatment of the best doctor in Georgetown, S. C. for a year, but could get no relief. A friend advised me to try Dr. King's New Discovery. I did so, and was completely cured. I feel that I owe my life to this great throat and lung cure."
