AMUSEMENTS "Southern Ideals"

Edited By BRUCE Q. NABERS. "The Blue Mouse"-Laughable.

Despite the extreme inclemency of the weather two very good crowds saw "The Blue Mouse" presented at the Academy of Music yesterday afternoon and last night, and from the amount of laughter indulged in, it appeared that both crowds enjoyed the show immensely.

been hailed as something risque. Mayors of some of the smaller towns have made efforts to have it barred from the local opera houses. After witnessing the show as presented last night. the utter absurdity of this course is readily seen. There is nothing obectionable in the entire performance and a plan to put dresses on the bare lamp posts would be just as sensible appointed people in the house were the ones who went expecting to see somemoney's worth for there was not a him undivided attention. minute of the time something funny was not being introduced. presenting "The Blue Mouse."

"Graustark."

"A Love Behind a Throne," the subtitle of "Graustark," is very appropriate in its suggestion of the theme of George Barr McCutcheon's thrilling novel which George D. Baker has made into one of the most popular book-plays of recent years.

It is a clash of the ideals of old Euope and young America, the one over he verge and starting down civilization's decline, the other in the first flush of its vigorous youth. The older regime clings tenaciously to prejudices established by centuries of custom. The younger, with iconoclastic disregard for mouldy tradition, casts aside he usages of a worm-eaten past and eagerly grapples with the wonderful present.

Princess Yetive, her ministers and court, represent the convervatism of Europe. The intrepid hero, Grenfall Lorry, is the apotheosis of all that represents America. How he batters down the walls of royal reserve, oridges the gulf which separates him from "the one woman" overcomes ancient hereditary laws and in spite of nerself, wins the heart of a princess, s one of the prettiest romances that ever inspired a novelist's pen. Mr. Davis, grocer, Sulphur Springs, Tex. James W. Castle, well known genius for stage direction should be a guarantee of the beauty and completeness of this sumptuous production.

"Graustark" will be presented at the Academy of Music Wednesday matinee and night, March 15.

"Graustark is coming," is the phrasing heard by Mr. Merthemer, the agent for the company, on many occasions this past season. This goes to prove the popularity of both book and play by the general public.

Yetive Princess, of Graustark, (Miss Guggenslocker), is played by Miss Benson, a well known leading lady of the far west, who by her daintiness and clever acting has won the approval of press and public on this year tour of the west and south.

"Graustark" will be presented at the Academy of Music for a matinee and night performance on Wednesday,
